PREFACE.

ARDLY had my "Alumni Oxonienses" appeared when I was led, in deference to a very general wish, to supplement it by some account of the Colleges themselves and their officers. It was felt that the interest of my "Alumni" would be materially enhanced by descriptions and views of the Colleges which, during their University career, are the homes of Oxford men. In the present work therefore, I have made it my special object to bring before my readers that college life which has always formed so distinctive a feature of the English Universities. Keeping this object before me I have illustrated the book throughout with views of the colleges, of the interiors of their chapels, their libraries, and their halls, their characteristic quads, and other objects of interest, mainly archæological. These are accompanied by chronological biographies in outline of the Heads of each respective House, from the earliest period, of all living Fellows, past and present, and of other officers. Complete chronological lists, under each College, of all its members from 1880 to 1892 complete this part of the scheme.

With few exceptions, the notices of the Colleges have been written specially for this work by the following Oxford historians :—

* The Notices of Balliol, New, All Souls', Wadham, Worcester, and Hertford are, with the permission of the publisher, practically condensed by their respective authors from their accounts in "The Colleges of Oxford," edited by Rev. A. Clark, M.A. (London: Methuen, 1891).

As the present work continues and completes "Alumni Oxonienses," it contains in addition to its collegiate information, the MATRICULATION REGISTER from 1880 to 1892 alphabetically arranged as a distinct division, including, as a matter of course, cross-references to all the biographical notices under the respective colleges or elsewhere.

While the MATRICULATION REGISTER has been placed at my service as before by the University Authorities, the Heads of Houses have allowed me full access to their COLLEGE RECORDS, from which, in the majority of instances, I have been enabled to glean the birthdays and schools of their members since 1880, thus accentuating and perpetuating the link between the Schools and the Universities. Moreover, from the official University publications, viz. : the Honours register, Calendar, and Gazette, I have incorporated the particulars of the Honours, the degrees, and the appointments relating to each individual. This elaborate array of facts, together with the miscellaneous annotations from Crockford and my own collections, especially parliamentary and legal, should prove a trustworthy and unique guide, such as can be found nowhere else, to the rising generation of Oxford Men, destined to play so large a part in the government and intellectual life of this country.

From their antiquity, picturesqueness, and historical associations, the Colleges of Oxford have ever held a high position as national monuments, and this has perhaps somewhat overshadowed their peculiar character as living organisms. They are not the relics of a dead past ; they are, as they have been for centuries, the homes of corporate bodies, preserving an unbroken existence. Their home life, indeed, is something sui generis, preserving, as it does, in the ways of the community, as in the architectural shell that contains it, much in common with mediæval England. It is this genius loci that I have endeavoured to reproduce, and to this end I have availed myself of those processes which by the aid of photography have enabled me to reproduce in reduced facsimile nearly the whole of Loggan's Views of the Colleges (1675), and of the engravings of Bereblook's Views from "Collegiorum Scholarumque Publicarum Academiæ Oxoniensis Topographica Delineatio" per Thomas Nelum (1566), published by Hearne, 1713.

Many illustrations have been taken from Skelton's "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata," 1823, and also from Ackerman's "Oxford," when nothing better was to be obtained. These for the most part have been successfully reproduced, by the Ink-photo process of Messrs. Sprague.

The delegates of the press have, with their accustomed courtesy, allowed me to reproduce some of the illustrations from the Oxford Almanacs, and those well-known artists, Messrs. Hills and Saunders, and Messrs. Gillman, have practically allowed me carte blanche to reproduce any of their photographs.

There will thus be found within the covers of this book an absolutely unrivalled collection of views, relative to Oxford and its life.

Nor does even the above list exhaust the wealth of illustration with which this volume is adorned, for all the headpieces and initial letters which were engraved for Wood's "Historia et Antiquitates Universitatis Oxoniensis," 1674, have been reproduced, while many illustrations from Ingram's "Memorials of Oxford" also appear, with the kindly assent of the publishers, Messrs. Parker & Co., and all those charming College coats of arms, so artistically designed for the Alumni by Mr. J. H. Metcalfe, have been utilized. Further, in the place of tailpieces, illustrations have been substituted of some of those architectural features, etc., which abound in the older Oxford Colleges. These are taken principally from Mackenzie's "Gothic Architecture," Pugin's "Gothic Ornaments," Shaw's "Specimens of Ancient Furniture," Carter's "Specimens of Ancient Sculpture," etc. I should add that to the spirited exertions of my printers, S. Austin and Sons, of Hertford, the public are indebted for the excellent printing of this interesting volume.

No picture of Oxford Life could lay claim to completeness which did not show the members of the Colleges at play as well as at work. Indeed, the College Coat, with its distinctive arms, or perhaps its badge, introduces even into the sports of to-day the historic life of Oxford, and reminds us that heraldry, here, at least, has never lost its significance or its pride. The "eight," the "eleven," and the football teams are an integral part of College and University life, and I have included among my illustrations several typical crews and teams by the aid of the collotype process and the agency of Waterlow and Sons. If the proposition meets with sufficient encouragement I should also some day hope to illustrate by portraits the personnel of the University, its Fellows, Professors, and other distinguished Alumni, in the same manner as its Heads of Houses.

I would venture in conclusion to point out that my whole scheme is original in conception, and, by combining "ancient and modern," endeavours to represent "the men" and "their colleges" as they actually are. The fact that, in the compilation of this volume, I have been privileged to enjoy not merely the sympathy but the active assistance of University Officials of all ranks will speak, I trust, for itself, impressing as it does, upon my scheme the stamp of their approval. I feel, therefore, emboldened to hope that it will appeal to all Oxford men, to their relatives and their friends, indeed to all who are proud—and what Englishman is not?—of our great University, so that having illustrated these pages in a manner worthy of their subject, and having rendered my book in any case a standard work, a charming memory of Alma Mater for all her Alumni, I may at least not be the loser, as was disastrously the case in my colossal Oxford work, over which many, to me now physically impossible, years of unremitting and unremunerative toil were willingly bestowed and the exhausting and never-to-be-recouped editorial expenses cheerfully borne, only to be apathetically received by all but the few genealogical enthusiasts and to be disappointingly appreciated even by the University itself. Should my still hopeful anticipations be realised and my latest efforts be favourably received, a companion volume on the sister University, for which considerable collections have already been made, may be looked for by Cambridge men in the coming year.

Oxford Men and their Colleges.

I.—UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.

Historical Notice of the Great Hall of the University. By Fred. C. Conybeare, M.A., late Scholar, Fellow and Praelector.

ESPIE claims raised in the 17th century to an earlier date, it is clear that University College really owes its origin to the benefaction of William of Durham, who died in the year 1249, and bequeathed by will to the University of Oxford the sum of 310 marks, out of the interest upon which he required that ten or eleven or twelve or more masters should be maintained. About William of Durham, the true founder of the college, we glean some scanty information from the "History of his Times," written by Matthew Paris. We know therefrom that he was one of a number of famous English scholars who in the year 1229 migrated from the University of Paris in consequence of a conflict which took place in that year between the Students and the townspeople. These Town and Gown Rows, as they were in a later age called, were common in the middle ages in cities to which scholars and teachers resorted, and inasmuch as an University at that date was not located in large and sumptuous buildings of its own, but had to conduct its disputations and lectures in hired rooms or by permission in a neighbouring monastery or priory or church, it was easy for the scholars, if discontented with the treatment they met with in any city, to leave it and repair to another centre.

As his name implies, William of Durham must have been born and bred in that city, and was no doubt educated in it or in the monastery of Weremouth close by. After leaving Paris we may infer, though it is not positively stated, that he finished his studies in Oxford. In later life he was Rector of the Church of Weremouth, but he certainly kept up his connection with Oxford, and a deed is preserved in which, "by the name of Wilhelmus de Dunelm' dictus Magister, he appointed an agent to collect for him the interest on monies lent to a Nunnery only four miles from Oxford."*

The actual will of the founder is lost, and we only know its exact provisions from a report issued in 1280 or 1281 by certain masters whom the University had appointed to enquire into the manner in which the Testament of Master William of Durham had been carried out. However, there still exist the deeds by which the earliest houses belonging to the College came into its possession. The first of these is dated 1253, and gives to the Chancellor, Masters, and Scholars of Oxford the possession of a house which stood on the ground now occupied by the north-east corner of Brazenose College. This house, along with four shillings quit rent from another tenement, was bought by the University as trustees for William of Durham's scholars for 36 marks. In the next year but one, 1255, a house opposite the present College Lodge was purchased for 48 marks. A third house, then or shortly after known as Brazen-nose Hall, was bought in 1262 for £55 6s. 8d. sterling. This house, along with the one first purchased, completed what is now the frontage of Brazenose College upon Radcliffe Square. The rest of William of Durham's Bequest was lent by the University to the peers of the Realm, to assist them in their constitutional struggle with Henry the Third, or was used by the University for its own purposes. Thus the Commission appointed to enquire report in 1280 that Rents had been bought for William of Durham's scholars to the yearly value of only 18 marks. The "great men of the land" had at that time it seems repaid their loan, but of the remaining one hundred Pounds and ten Marks nothing was as yet then restored.

Did William of Durham's scholars from the first live together, like the members of a College, as we understand it to-day? Of this there is no evidence, and perhaps we should infer the opposite from the report of the Commission of 1280, which enacts that four Masters of Arts, chosen in the first instance by the Chancellor and certain Masters in Divinity, but themselves afterwards having a voice in the filling up of vacancies in their number, "shall, living together, study Divinity." This, perhaps, implies that prior to 1280 they were not gathered together under one roof, but lived in halls and houses of their own choosing, as the Hertford and Ireland University Scholars do at the present day. It is likely enough, however, that they lived in one of the houses bought for them; the more so, as two of these houses faced upon school-street, in which, or close to which, the chief university disputations and lectures were held. School-street, the vicus scholarum, coincided with the space now called Radcliffe Square, and has ever since been the focus of University life. In close proximity to it was situated the first University Library with the room beneath for the congregation of Regent Masters to meet in, which in 1320 Thomas Cobham, Bishop of Worcester, built as an annexe of the University Church of St. Mary the Virgin.*

The monies bequeathed by William of Durham were kept in a special coffer, called the chest of William of Durham, which was probably kept in the Priory of St. Frideswyde, since the University until 1320 had no buildings of its own. This is perhaps more likely than that it should have been kept in one of the houses or halls purchased in 1253 and 1255. Sir Maxwell Lyte, the historian of the University, suggests that the bulk of the bequest lay idle in the chest, and that no scholars were really appointed out of the interest on it until 1280. "Unprofitable loans," he says, "were occasionally granted to clerks," and "the University did not scruple to help itself in times of need . . . and it was not until more than thirty years after the death of William of Durham that any of the rents purchased with his money began to be applied in accordance with the terms of his will." (Hist. of the University, p. 71). This is to suppose that no interest was paid upon the loans made and no notice taken of the will of William of Durham further than was involved in the purchase of the three houses mentioned. It may with equal likelihood be supposed that the bequests of the will were so far as possible at once carried into effect, and that the purpose of the further regulations of 1280 was to bring the scholars in future under one roof, to provide from among them a Bursar or responsible person to keep the chest, and look after the houses purchased, to arrange for their discipline and payment and future method of election. This is the more likely because 12 years later, in 1292, we find that William of Durham's executors were still alive and exerting themselves to induce the University to enact statutes more in accordance with the will than were those of 1280.

The payment made to each of the four masters appointed in 1280 was fifty shillings yearly, the same amount as was paid to the scholars of the New Foundation of Walter de Merton. The Bursar received five shillings more. All were to be Masters of Arts and were to study Divinity. One of them at least was to be a priest. No local restrictions were imposed, but they were to be poor men, who would not otherwise be able to "live handsomely in the State of Masters of Arts."

* See Maxwell Lyte "History of the University of Oxford, p. 99"

In 1292, at the procurement of the Executors of the Venerable Mr. William of Durham, the University made new statutes for his scholars. In these statutes several novelties occur. Firstly, the senior socius or fellow is to rule the juniors. Here we have the germ of the future master of the College, and until a late period the master was officially known as senior socius. Secondly, we have mention of a College library or collection of books, and the conditions are laid down under which the fellows might use them or take them out. "Let there be put one book of every sort that the House has in some common and secure place." Thirdly, the fellows shall say mass at the beginning of each term for the Benefactors. Fourthly, no fellow shall undervalue another fellow under certain penalties, which are to be doubled if he do it publicly. Fifthly, provision is made for the admission of commoners, and, as particular interest attaches to this, the first mention of them, we give in full the clause regulating their admission:—"Since the aforesaid Scholars have not sufficiently to live handsomely alone by themselves, but that it is expedient that other honest persons dwell with them; it is ordained, That every Fellow shall secretly enquire concerning the Manners of everyone that desires to sojourn with them; and then if they please, by common consent, let him be received under this condition, That before them he shall promise, whilst he lives with them, that he will honestly observe the customs of the Fellows of the House, pay his Dues, not hurt any of the Things belonging to the House, either by himself or those that belong to him." Sixthly, it was ordained that Latin be spoken within the College according to the Custom of the time.

Other points which deserve notice with regard to the early Foundation are these. The will of William of Durham enacted that his scholars should be born in the diocese of Durham, but the first statutes made by the University in 1280 disregarded this restriction. The Executors of the will objected, and in 1292 it was laid down that the College was to be recruited from the parts nearest to Durham. The third body of Statutes made in 1311 enacted that the Fellows should be indigent persons of good morals, who shall be ceteris paribus born nearest to the parts of Durham. This restriction continued down to the middle of this century, and similar restrictions were imposed on the Fellowships created by later Foundations: e.g. in 1403 three Fellowships were created by king Henry IV. at the request of Walter Skirlaw, for which were to be preferred persons born in the dioceses of York or Durham. In 1442 three more Fellowships were founded by Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, for persons born in the dioceses of Durham, Carlisle, or York, with a preference, other things being equal, to natives of Northumberland. The College was thus for many centuries distinctly a Northern College, and it was not till 1631 that there was any change in this respect. In that year Sir Simon Bennett founded four Scholarships and four Fellowships, to be held by natives of the See of Canterbury or of the South of England. In recent years, owing to the recommendations of the Oxford University Commission appointed 1850, and of new statutes made in 1872, all local restrictions on the choice of Fellows and Scholars have been practically abandoned. Likewise all clerical restrictions. The will of William of Durham and the earliest codes of statutes distinctly contemplated lay Fellowships, or else they would not have enacted that the senior Fellow or Master was to be in Priest's

II.—BALLIOL COLLEGE.

By Reginald L. Poole, M.A.

THE origin of Balliol College is traced to certain payments made by John Balliol not long after 1260 for the support of poor students at Oxford. The founder, in expiation of some ecclesiastical offence, was condemned to be publicly scourged by the Bishop of Durham at his Abbey door and also to make this academic endowment. John Balliol, lord of Galloway, was the father of that John to whom King Edward the First of England adjudged the Scottish crown in 1292. His wife, the heiress, was Dervorguilla, grandniece to King William the Lion. It is to her far more than to her husband that the real foundation of the College bearing his name is due, and husband and wife are rightly coupled together as joint-founders, the lion of Scotland being associated with the orle of Balliol on the College shield. A house was first hired beyond the city ditch on the north side of Oxford, hard by the church of St. Mary Magdalen, and here certain poor scholars were lodged and paid eightpence a day for their commons. It was in the beginning a simple almshouse, founded on the model already existing at Paris, it depended for its maintenance upon the good pleasure of the founder, and possessed (so far as we know) no sort of organization, though customs and rules were certain to shape themselves before long without any positive enactment.

This state of things lasted until 1282, when Dervorguilla—her husband had died in 1269—took steps to place the House of Balliol upon an established footing. In her charter she showed that the example set by the founder of Merton College, to whose statutes the entire college system of Oxford and Cambridge owes its type, was already bearing fruit. But unlike Merton, which was designed specially as a training school for the secular clergy, Balliol was at first set under the joint governorship of two Proctors, one of whom was regularly a Franciscan friar. Under them stood the Principal, or acting governor, who was elected by the Scholars of the House. 'This charter was plainly but the giving of a constitution to a society which had already formed for itself rules and usages with respect to discipline and other matters not referred to in it.' In a couple of years the Scholars moved to a house bought for them a little eastward of their previous abode, and before the middle of the following century they had so enlarged their buildings that they occupied nearly the site of the present outer-quadrangle, and a chapel dedicated to St. Catherine—the special patron of the College—had been built. The College also possessed a house containing four Schools intended for the performance of academic exercises, which stood on part of the site of the existing Divinity School.

Early in the fourteenth century there seems to have been an active dispute among the Scholars as to the studies which they were permitted to pursue. It had been expressly ordained that they should dwell in the House until they had completed their course in Arts. It seemed therefore to follow, that it was not lawful for them to go on to a further course of study, for instance, in Divinity, without ceasing their connexion with the House. At length in 1325 this inference was formally ratified by the two Extraneous Masters, the successors of the original Proctors of the house, possessed of quasi-visitatorial powers, in the presence of all the members as well as four graduates who had formerly been Fellows (a title which now first appears in the College muniments as a synonym for Scholars) of the House. 'It was thus decided that Balliol should be a home exclusively of secular learning; and it reads as a curious presage, that thus early in the history of the college the field should be marked out for it in which, in the fifteenth century and again in our own day, it was peculiarly to excel.'

But the Theologians soon had some compensation, for in 1340 a new endowment was given to the College by Sir Philip Somerville for their special benefit. His statutes, however, established so complicated a system that it had after not many years to give way to a new code drawn up under papal authority by Simon Sudbury, Bishop of London, in 1364. In this the old Proctors or Extraneous Masters survive under the name of Rectors, but the ultimate control was left with the Bishop of London. These Statutes continued in force until 1507 when a new body of Statutes—the work of Bishop Foxe, of Winchester, the founder of Corpus Christi College—was enacted, which remained, with small modifications, the law of the College until 1854. The College was now declared to possess the unique privilege of electing its own Visitor. 'But the essential changes introduced in the Statutes of 1507 are those which gave the College a distinctively theological complexion, and those which established a class of students in the College subordinate to the Fellows.' Two Chaplain-Fellowships were established, and all the other Fellows, whose number was reduced, were called upon to take Priest's Orders within four years after their degree of M.A. 'Doubtless from the beginning all the members of the foundation had been—as indeed all University students were—clerici; but this did not necessarily imply more than the simple taking of the tonsure. The obligation of Priest's orders was something very different.'

'The reduction in the number of Fellowships was evidently made in order to provide for the lower rank of what we should nowadays call Scholars. In the Statutes, indeed, this name is not found, for it was not forgotten that Fellow and Scholar meant the same thing; and so the old word scholasticus, which was often used in the general sense of a "student," was now applied to designate those junior members of the College for whom Scholar was too dignified a title. They were to be "scholastics or servitors," not above eighteen years of age, sufficiently skilled in plain song and grammar. One was assigned to the Master, and one to each graduate Fellow, and was nominated by him; he was his private servant. The Scholastics were to live of the remnants of the Fellows' table, to apply themselves to the study of logic, and to attend Chapel in surplices. They had also the preference, in case of equality, in election to Fellowships.' The position of these Scholars (as they came to be called) unquestionably improved greatly in the course of time, but the Statute affecting them was not remodelled until 1834.

Another point of interest in the Statutes of 1507 is the provision, authorising a practice which was not a new one, that the College might receive boarders not on the foundation—what we now call Commoners or persons who pay for their commons and rooms—on the condition of their following a prescribed course of study; and the fact of their receiving no allowance seems to have given them a choice of rooms. They represented the aristocratic element in the College, and were in time distinguished by rank, fees, and privileges in hall, as Commoners and Fellow Commoners. 'The Master, Fellows, and Scholastics were bound on Sundays and Feast-days to attend matins, with lauds, mass, vespers, and compline; and any Fellow who absented himself was liable to a fine of twopence, while Scholastics were punished with a flogging or otherwise at the discretion of the Master and Dean . . . The Bible or one of the Fathers was to be read in hall during dinner, and all conversation to be in Latin, unless addressed to one—presumably a guest or a servant—ignorant of the language. French was not permitted as it was at Queen's. . . . The gates of the College were closed at nine in summer and eight in winter, and the keys deposited with the Master until the morning;' and so late as the middle of the eighteenth century the Dean was wont to visit the undergraduates' rooms at nine o'clock at night 'to see that they kept good hours.' 'Whoever spent the night out of College or entered except by the gate, was punished, a Fellow by a fine of twelve pence, a Scholastic by a flogging.'

Among the famous men who belonged to Balliol during the earlier centuries of its history, we may mention Richard FitzRalph, Archbishop of Armagh (1347-1360), the strenuous antagonist of the Mendicant Orders; John Wycliffe, the reformer, who was Master of the College in 1360; Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, brother to King Henry V., the second founder of the University Library; William Grey, Chancellor of the University, Bishop of Ely, and Lord Treasurer; George Montagu, Archbishop of York, who was Chancellor of the University in 1453 when still in his twenty-second year, and who signalled his installation by a banquet, of which the particulars are preserved, of unheard-of profusion; and John Tiptoft, Earl of Worcester, no less famous as a collector of books than infamous by his cruelty as High Constable of England.

Of these William Grey stands in a peculiarly close relation with the College. He spent many years in study at Cologne and in Italy. In 1449 he settled in Rome, as proctor for King Henry VI., where he lived 'an honoured member of the learned society in the papal city, and continued to collect manuscripts and to have them transcribed and illuminated under his eyes, until he was recalled in 1454 to the Bishopric of Ely.' After his return to England, while he was not regardless of the affairs of State 'his paramount interest still lay in his books and his circle of scholars, himself credited with a knowledge not only of Greek but of Hebrew. It was his desire that his library should be preserved within the walls of his old College. One of its members, Robert Abdy, heartily co-operated with him, and the books—some two hundred in number, and including a printed copy of Josephus—were safely housed in a new building erected for the purpose, probably just before the Bishop's death in 1478. Many of the codices were unhappily destroyed during the reign of King Edward the Sixth, and by Wood's time few of the miniatures in the remaining volumes had escaped mutilation. But it is a good testimony to the loyal spirit in which the College kept the trust committed to them, that no less than a hundred and fifty-two of Grey's manuscripts are still in its possession.

'Part of the building in which the library was to find a home was already in existence. The ground-floor and perhaps the dining-hall (now the library reading-room) adjoining, are attributed to Thomas Chase, who had been Master from 1412 to 1423, and was Chancellor of the University from 1426 to 1430;' but the upper part of the library was expressly built for the purpose of receiving Bishop Grey's books, and it was the work of Abdy, who as Fellow and then, from 1477 to 1494, as Master devoted himself, not without substantial aid from the Bishop, to the enlargement and adornment of the College buildings.

During the two centuries following the reign of King Edward the Third, the College had received little or no addition to its corporate endowments, though it had been largely helped by donations towards its buildings, and above all by the foundation of its precious library. The Fellowships were open without limitation of place of birth or bringing-up; and in only a few was there a preference permitted in favour of a particular locality. Still, no doubt, the College 'was a very close corporation, for Fellow nominated Scholar, and out of the Scholars the Fellows were generally elected.' The four generations following the accession of Queen Elizabeth saw the College enriched with a number of new benefactions, all (with the exception of the Fellowship and Scholarships founded by Elizabeth, Lady Periam), distinguished from the older endowments by restriction to a particular place or school. Among these the Fellowship and Scholarship—afterwards two of each order—founded by Peter Blundell in connexion with his school at Tiverton deserve to be noticed. 'After the Restoration two separate benefactions set up that close connexion between the College and Scotland which saved Balliol from sinking into utter obscurity in the century following, and which has since contributed to it a large share of its later fame. Bishop Warner of Rochester, who died in 1666, bequeathed to the College the annual sum of eighty pounds for the support of four scholars from Scotland, to be chosen by the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of Rochester; and about ten years later certain Exhibitions were founded by Mr. John Snell for persons nominated by Glasgow University. . . . Their importance in the history of the College cannot be over-estimated, and it is to them that it owes such names among its members as Adam Smith, Sir William Hamilton, and Archbishop Tait, to say nothing of a great company of distinguished Scotsmen now living.' During the present reign the College has been able to establish a number of Scholarships for proficiency in the newer studies of Law, Modern History, and Natural Science out of a fund endowed for the purpose by Miss Hannah Brakenbury; and two Exhibitions of £100 a year each have been founded under the will of Richard Jenkyns, formerly Master, which are awarded by examination to members of the College, and the list of holders of which is of exceptional brilliancy.

In the first days of the College its members had to attend the parish Church of St. Mary Magdalen on all festivals; they had not a Chapel licensed for the celebration of the Mass until 1364. A new Chapel was built in the reign of King Henry VIII. but was destroyed under the Mastership of Dr. Scott, when the present Chapel was erected on its site. Various blocks of buildings, which form what is called the garden quadrangle, grew up by degrees from the early part of last century until fifteen years ago, when they were completed by the erection of a new dining-hall suited to the requirements of what has become one of the largest Colleges in Oxford. Not long before this the whole of the outer quadrangle and the Master's lodgings were also taken down and rebuilt in a style, and on a scale, which are considered to harmonise ill with those of the rest of the College.

BELL TOWER, ST. ALBAN HALL.—From Ingram.

The history of Balliol during the centuries following the Reformation offers few points of interest. The College seems to have been long in recovering from the misfortunes into which it fell after the great civil war; and its numbers were so small that in 1681, when the Parliament sat in Oxford, it was glad to place its buildings at the service of the opposition peers. In the eighteenth century it was probably not much worse, and certainly not much better, than the majority of other Colleges at a time when the forms of the mediæval academic system survived without the reality, and when the habits of social life acquired a grossness too seldom tempered by the refinement or the zeal for learning which marked the century before it. As an illustration of the manners of Balliol in the days of Queen Anne it may be noticed that the knives and forks were chained to the table in hall, while the trenchers were made of wood. The real revival of Balliol College began after the election of John Parsons as Master in 1798. He was active in forwarding the Statute which established the modern system of public examinations, which for good or for evil forms the characteristic feature of the English Universities of the nineteenth century, and in 1807 he became Vice-Chancellor. In his College he was distinguished for the energy with which he reformed the Tutorial system and set on a firm foundation an organisation for teaching undergraduates as well as for keeping them in order.

When Parsons was made Bishop of Peterborough in 1813 Richard Jenkyns, as Vice-Master, became the virtual governor of the College, over which from 1819 to 1854 he presided as Master. His reign is marked by the great changes which put an end completely to the old College system. In 1834 almost all the Scholarships were thrown open to public competition; and in 1838 the clerical restriction upon Fellowships was so far modified that any man might be elected provided that he resigned at the time when the Statutes called upon him to receive Holy Orders. The Act of Parliament, which reformed alike the University and the Colleges, was passed about the time of Dr. Jenkyns' death. The Blundell Fellowships were now thrown open, and the majority of the Fellowships exempted from clerical obligations. Under the Mastership of Robert Scott, who succeeded Jenkyns, Mr. Jowett (who in turn became Master in 1870) was the leading member of the Tutorial body; and the system of the College was more and more adapted to what are understood as liberal principles of education. Among more recent institutions may be noticed the policy of attracting selected students for the Indian Civil Service, and of diversifying the common pattern of College life by the admission as members of the College of persons of various nationality who desired only instruction in certain subjects, and did not read for a degree. But the example of Balliol was soon followed by other Colleges.

*Every College has its own ideal, and that of Balliol has been by a steady policy adapted to the modern spirit of work, employing the best materials not so much for learning as an end in itself, as a means towards practical success in life. In this field, in the distinctions of the schools, of the courts, and of public life, it has been seldom rivalled by any other College. The College has excelled particularly 'in its practical men of affairs, diplomatists, judges, members of parliament, civil service officials, college tutors, and school-masters. At the present moment it counts among former members no less than seven of her Majesty's Judges, and seven Heads of Oxford Colleges. But to show that another side of culture has been represented at Balliol in the present reign, we must not forget the band of Balliol poets, Arthur Hugh Clough, Matthew Arnold, and Algernon Charles Swinburne.'

The foregoing sketch is substantially abridged from a more comprehensive notice of this College by the same writer contained in The Colleges of Oxford, edited by the Rev. A. Clark (Methuen 1891), and passages quoted from it are placed between inverted commas.

MASTERS.

PRINCIPALS OR WARDENS.

1. Foderingey, Walter de, M.A., principal of this college 1282-96; prebend of Marston St. Lawrence 1298, and of Nassington 1312 (both) in Lincoln cathedral; died 1315.
2. Warkenby, Hugh de, M.A., principal 1296.
3. Cornwall, Stephen de, M.A., "custos domus de Balliolo" 31 Ed. I. 1303, doctor of physic and priest.*
4. Chickwell, Richard de, M.A.; occurs as "custos" in writ, 18 Aug., 3 Ed. II. 1309.
5. Waldeby, Thomas de, 1321.
6. Seton, Henry de, occurs in writ 28 Feb., 17 Ed. II. 1323.
7. Luceby, Nicholas de, "custos" 1 Ed. III. 1327.
8. Poelington, John de, custos 6 Ed. III. 1332, master of University college 1362.

MASTERS.

1. Corbrygge, Hugh de, M.A., occurs master 1343.
2. Derby, Robert de, 1356.
3. Kingston, William de.
4. Wycliff, John, M.A., master 1360, "the reformer," read public lectures in divinity as professor; rector of Fillingham, co. Lincoln, 14 May, 1361 (on the presentation of the master and fellows of Balliol hall), exchanged it in 1368 for the rectory of Ludgershall, Bucks; rector of Lutterworth, co. Leicester, 1374, prebend of Aust in the collegiate church of Westbury, co. Gloucester, 1375, chaplain to Edward III.; died 31 Dec., 1384, buried in Lutterworth church; for mention of other entries of his names see foot note.†
5. Hugate, John, master 1366.
6. Tyrwhyt, Thomas, M.A., master 1371 and 1397.
7. Haskham, Hamon, master 1397.

* The date of this and many of the following heads is not that of the actual appointment but of the first document in which the person is mentioned as master.

† JOHN WICLYVE, priest, vicar of Mayfield, Sussex, 21 July, 1361, which he exchanged in 1380 for the rectory of Horsted Keynes, prebend of Chichester, his will dated 12 and proved 21 Nov., 1383. Courthope, Somerset Herald, adds that this John was the ejected warden of Canterbury Hall, now incorporated into Christ Church, and not the reformer as some suppose, see Gent.'s Mag. 1841, ii. 146; he as John Wycliffe, clerk, of the diocese of York, was appointed one of the original scholars of Canterbury Hall 1364, and warden 9 Dec., 1365, ejected 1367, Gent.'s Mag. 1841, ii. 378, and 1844, ii. 136; perhaps rector of Wycliffe-upon-Tees between 1363 and 1369.

8. Lambert, or LAMBARD, William, M.A., master 8 Hen. IV. 1406, gave several manuscripts to the college library.
9. Chace, Thomas, M.A., master 13 Hen. IV. 1412, chancellor of the university 1426-31, chaplain to Humphrey, duke of Gloucester, said to have been chancellor of Ireland and of St. Paul's cathedral; died 1449.
10. Burleigh, Robert, M.A., master 2 Hen. VI. 1423.
11. Stapylton, Robert, M.A., master 7 Hen. VI. 1429, gave several manuscripts to the college library.
12. Brandon, William, M.A., was master 10 Hen. VI. 1432, proctor 1431-2.
13. Thwaites, Robert, M.A., master 29 Hen. VI. 1451, proctor 1423, vice-chancellor 1441, and chancellor of the university 1445-6; dean of Auckland, preb. of Southwell 1438.

III.—MERTON COLLEGE.

By the Hon. George Charles Brodrick, D.C.L., Warden.

COEVAL with the House of Commons "The House of the Scholars of Merton," the earliest of English Colleges, and the model of all the rest, dates its pedigree from the year 1264, having been founded by Walter de Merton, Chancellor to Henry III. Its original seat was Malden, in Surrey, but provision was made in its first Statutes for a body of students at Oxford, and in 1274 it was settled by the founder upon its present site, under a new code of Statutes, which remained in force within living memory. The noble choir of its Chapel, erected in the latter part of the 13th century, is the oldest collegiate building in Oxford, if we exclude fragments of monastic buildings afterwards converted to collegiate uses; its Treasury, Sacristy, and Library, with the grand buildings of New College, are the chief, if not the only, genuine remains of 14th century architecture, other than monastic, among Oxford Colleges. No doubt, the idea to which Merton owed its origin was borrowed from monastic institutions, but the spirit of the Founder's statutes was essentially anti-monastic. The College was to be a society of secular, and not of regular, clergy; and the Founder expressly ordained that if any of its Fellows should embrace religious vows, he should cease to be a member of it. The majority of them, it is true, were to employ themselves in the study of Arts, Philosophy, or Theology; but it was specially provided that four or five might become students of Canon and Civil Law within the College, while it was also contemplated that others should go forth into the great world. On the other hand students in "grammar," the very first step in learning, were distinctly recognized, and a "grammar master" was to be appointed, to whom even more advanced scholars might have recourse for instruction "without a blush."

For more than a century after its foundation, Merton College was by far the foremost place of education in Oxford, and the number of famous Schoolmen reputed to have been Mertonians shows, at least, the estimation in which it was held. Of these great names a few must be admitted to rest upon doubtful evidence. It is highly improbable that Roger Bacon was connected with Merton, and it cannot be clearly proved that Duns Scotus, William of Ockham, or Wyclif, were actually Fellows of the College. But it is quite certain that Walter Burley and Bradwardine were Fellows, and that not only theological and metaphysical studies, but mathematics, astronomy, physics and medicine, were ardently cultivated at Merton in the 14th and 15th centuries. Anthony Wood tells us that a chief reason why the medical lectureships founded by Linacre were assigned to Merton was the fact that "there were more physicians in that House than in any other in the University." An extraordinary number of Mertonians filled important offices in Church and State during the same period, and Merton took an honourable part in the Revival of Learning which preceded the Reformation. Under the stress of that great crisis, some of its Fellows temporized, like others, but in the main, the sympathies of the College were on the Catholic, or reactionary side, though it contributed Jewell to the Protestant cause. It was otherwise when Oxford became a central point of attack and defence in the Revolution of the 17th century. The illustrious Harvey, it is true, was elected Warden, under the influence of Charles I, after the battle of Edgehill, and Queen Henrietta Maria was lodged in the College for a winter, but the Puritan movement was strongly represented in the College. The Warden, Sir Nathaniel Brent, who had been displaced by Harvey for a few months only, was the President of the Parliamentary Visitation, and most of the Fellows and students made their submission. It is remarkable that Cromwell, following the example of Charles I, induced the College to elect as Warden his own physician, Goddard, one of the founders of the Royal Society.

Though Merton gradually lost its commanding supremacy after the foundation of New College, it was still the leading College until it was overshadowed by Christ Church, and produced a considerable number of eminent men in the 17th century, among whom was the great Oxford antiquary, Anthony Wood. During the plague year, 1665, when the Court migrated to Oxford, not only the Queen but two of Charles II's favourite ladies were accommodated with rooms in the College, and when the Duke of Monmouth landed in Dorsetshire, it contributed no less than 40 musketeers and pikemen to oppose him. It does not, however, appear to have shared the Jacobite reaction of the next century; on the contrary, it was known as a stronghold of Whig principles in the reigns of George I. and George II. But it was not proof against the intellectual torpor which prevailed throughout the University in that age, and its annals during the 18th century were as uneventful as those of most other Colleges. The scanty proportion of honours obtained by Merton in the early class-lists, and the small number of its students, go far to show that it was little affected by the revival of Academical studies at the beginning of the present century. But its Fellowships were already open to merit, with comparatively slight restrictions, and among those elected to them within the last three generations several rose to high positions in Church or State, including two successive Bishops of Salisbury, and two successive Governor-Generals of Canada. When the first University Commission was appointed, Merton was among the foremost to welcome the necessary reforms, and rendered good service by drawing up new Statutes, which became the basis of those proposed for other Colleges. Having erected new buildings, and restored its ancient Hall, it has since largely increased its numbers, and is now exceeded, in this respect, by six or seven only of Oxford Colleges. Notwithstanding the recent annexation of St. Alban Hall, however, its accommodation for students is still limited.

Next to the College system itself, of which it was the first example, perhaps the most important contribution of Merton to University organization was the institution of Postmasters (Portionistae) founded by John Wylliott, about 1380. These differed from the junior Scholars of the original foundation in being a distinct order, and having no right of succession to what are now called Fellowships; and this new class of poor College "scholars," in the modern sense, long remained a distinctive feature of Merton. Of its primitive mediæval customs, the more essentially Catholic or barbarous had become obsolete in the days of Anthony Wood, and several described by him have since fallen into inevitable disuse. "The recitation of a thanksgiving prayer for benefits received from the Founder at the end of each Chapel service, the time-honoured practice of striking the Hall table with a wooden trencher as a signal for grace, and the ceremonies observed on the induction of a new Warden, are perhaps the only outward and visible relics of its ancient customary which the spirit of innovation has left alive." But the Chapel and Library, enclosing on three sides "Mob-Quadrangle," the veritable cradle of collegiate life; the unbroken series of archives in the Treasury, with its high pitched roof and catalogue of deeds, itself 600 years old; the sub-structure and antique doorway of the Hall; the College Garden, surrounded on two sides by the city wall of Henry III—these are monumental evidences of corporate vitality which give Merton an historical interest, almost unique among the Colleges of our English Universities.—G. C. BRODRICK, D.C.L.

ANCIENT BRASSES OF THE 14th AND 15th CENTURIES.—From Ingram.

IV.—EXETER COLLEGE.

LOWLY though surely the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries witnessed a great effort to improve the education given at Oxford. Hitherto that education had been largely in the hands of the Monks and Friars who were so numerous in the place. Augustinian Canons were settled at the famous Monastery of S. Frideswide, and at Osney, the Franciscans in S. Ebbes, the Dominicans in the Jewry, S. John's Hospital stood where Magdalen College was one day to stand, the Augustinian Friars held the future site of Wadham; besides these there were Carmelites and the Friars de Penitencia. But Walter de Merton, who was Chancellor of England, as well as Bishop of Rochester, founded Merton in 1264 to train students for the service of God in Church and State, on a plan which excluded the monastic influence altogether. No 'religious' person, i.e. monk or friar, was to be admitted on his foundation at all. Merton's aim was to establish 'a constant succession of scholars devoted to the pursuits of literature; bound to employ themselves in the study of arts or philosophy, theology or canon law,' the students in canon law however being limited to four or five. To remedy the prevailing ignorance of grammar, which Roger Bacon so emphatically laments, one of the fellows is ordered to devote himself to the study. It is directed that he shall be provided with all the necessary books, and shall regularly instruct the younger students, while the more advanced students are to have the benefit of his assistance when occasion may require. It is to be noted that English as well as Latin enters into his province of instruction. As the learned professions then practically belonged to the ranks of the clergy, most lawyers, doctors, etc., being at least in the lower orders, the clerical obligation at Merton, as far as it existed, was not at all a narrow limitation: in fact it cannot be held to have excluded any of those professions that possess a curriculum at either Oxford or Cambridge at the present day. The earlier statutes of Balliol, University, Oriel, Peterhouse (the earliest college at Cambridge), all borrow more or less from those of Merton. By the statutes of Exeter, the fourth college in order of foundation, only one fellow was required to be in orders. It is clear that the education of the laity was now thought to be as important as that of the clergy.

In 1314 Walter de Stapeldon, Bishop of Exeter, founded Stapeldon Hall at Oxford for scholars from Devon and Cornwall; but the ground in and near Hart Hall, which he had bought for this purpose, not proving large enough, he removed the students to S. Stephen's Hall, and gave them the rent of Hart Hall that their rooms might be rent free and kept in repair. Their new abode was at first also called Stapeldon Hall, but was soon better known as Exeter College.

Bishop Stapeldon was one of the leading men of his time. He was the son of William and Mabilla de Stapeldon, and was born about the year 1260 at Annerly in Monkleigh, Devon; his birthday was the 1st of February. Stapeldon soon rose to distinction, became professor of canon law at Oxford, and at the time of his election to the See of Exeter, 13th Nov., 1307, he was precentor of Exeter cathedral, rector of Aveton Giffard (since 1297), and chaplain to Clement V.—the Pope who removed the Papal See to Avignon, suppressed the Templars, and added the 'Clementines' to the canon law. As Bishop he succeeded Thomas de Bitton, who made several bequests to him. He was consecrated 13th Oct., 1308, and zealously pushed on the rebuilding of his cathedral. The Fabric Rolls shew that he was a benefactor to the amount of £1800, an immense sum in those days. He soon obtained high place, was sent by Edward I. to France 6 June, 1306, was one of those who elected the Lords Ordainers in March, 1310, and was much trusted by Edward II., was treasurer 18th Feb., 1319-20, and again after an interval of rest, granted at his own request, 9th May, 1322. In 1324 he was ordered to hold Cornwall for the King against the chance of a French invasion, and his Register contains very many documents connected with the management of the West of England addressed to him by the King. He accompanied Prince Edward to France, 9th Sept., 1325, when the Prince went to do homage for Guienne, and he probably saw enough to convince him that Queen Isabella was subtly plotting against her husband. When the Revolution broke out against Edward II., the bishop was left by the King, 2 Oct., 1326, in charge of London, but was murdered in Cheapside on the 15th of the same month. The Bishop of Exeter, riding towards his inn or hotel in Eldedeanes-Lane for dinner, encountered the mob, and hearing them shout 'traitor' he rode rapidly to S. Paul's for sanctuary, but was unhorsed and taken to Cheapside, stripped and beheaded. William Walle (his nephew) and John Padyngton the bishop's steward, met with the same fate. About the hour of vespers the same day, 15th October, the choir of S. Paul's took up the headless body of the prelate and conveyed it to S. Paul's but, on being informed that he died under sentence, the body was brought to S. Clement beyond the Temple, but was ejected, so that the naked corpse, with a rag given by the charity of a woman, was laid on a spot called 'Le Lawles Chirche' and, without any grave, lay there with those of his two esquires, without office of priest or clerk." Such is the account given by the French 'chronicle' of London (Camden Society, 1844, p. 52) . . . His remains were buried in S. Clement Danes; one account, however, adds that they were transferred to Exeter cathedral, 28th March, 1327. The present epitaph on his monument was composed by John Hoker in Elizabeth's reign, 1568, and put up at the expense of bishop Alley; it has been repaired several times. His house, Exeter Inn, near Temple Bar, was sacked by the mob, his books—including his 'Libri Pontificales'—destroyed . . . His inventory shows that he possessed books valued at £201 10s. 6d. which treated chiefly of scripture and canon law, with a few historical works such as the letters of Frederick II. and Peter de Vineis. He had previously given to the cathedral library a 'Catholicon,' beginning with the words 'Temporum summa' valued at £5, and the Chronicles of Westminster, 'De gestis Anglorum,' valued at £1 6s. 8d.

Stapeldon's Statutes bear date 24th April, 1316, when they were accepted by the Rector and Scholars, who were then in possession of Stapeldon Hall. By these statutes there were to be thirteen Scholars (i.e. Fellows), twelve studying philosophy and the thirteenth, a priest and chaplain, studying scripture or canon Law. Eight of the twelve were to be from Devon, four from the Archdeaconry of Cornwall, either born in the diocese or settled there. The chaplain was to be appointed by the Chapter of Exeter and, if he should be declared unfit by two-thirds of the fellows, the Chapter was to appoint another. He was to celebrate and say the services, and manage the choir. Candidates for fellowships were to be at least sophists, i.e. students in arts. They were to 'determine as B.A.' within six years; to determine meant disputing in the schools the Lent following the degree of Bachelor. Within four years of that time, or at least in the summer term next after the end of four years, they had to 'incept' as M.A. Then they were to 'read' i.e. lecture two years, and after one year more vacate the fellowship within fifteen days. The fellowships were, therefore, at the outside only tenable for rather less than fourteen years. They also ceased as soon as a fellow inherited or obtained sixty shillings a year or any ecclesiastical benefice; and any one absenting himself five months in the year, or refusing to take the office of Rector, also lost his fellowship. The Rector was elected annually at the beginning of October, after the annual audit had taken place; the previous Rector was re-eligible, and was not unfrequently re-elected once or twice. He looked after the money, rooms, and servants, but if any two fellows demanded the removal of a servant, the Rector was to appoint another in his place. Fellows were to be elected 'without any regard to favour, fear, relationship or love, the electors naming those whom they believed to be the apter to learn, better in character, and poorer in means, or at least those who best come up to these three conditions.' The fellows were bound to dispute twice a week, but questions of natural science were to take the place of logic every third time. While sophists or bachelors the fellows were also to read 'abstracciones, obligationes, cynthategumeta, circa signa' (?). The statutes of Exeter College do not go into such minute detail as those of many other colleges, e.g., at Queen's, in 1340, the use of musical instruments is forbidden because they lead to levity and distract men from their studies.

The regard paid to comparative poverty brought forward some valuable men. Such, for instance, was Walter Lihert, the miller's son from Lanteglos-by-Fowey in Cornwall, who, after being fellow of Exeter, became Bishop of Norwich and built the sculptured roof of the cathedral; he supported in his troubles Reginald Pecoock, Bishop of Chichester, the author of 'The Repressor of over much blaming of the Clergy,' whom he had probably known when Reginald taught in one of the schools in School-street belonging to Exeter College. Similarly, long afterwards, John Prideaux, fellow in 1601, Rector 1612, used to say, 'If I could have been parish clerk of Ugborough, I should never have been Bishop of Worcester;' on his failing to become parish clerk, he had been advised to come as a poor scholar to the University. Benjamin Kennicott was master of a charity school at Totnes till, by the assistance of some friends, he was able to enter the University, where he became a distinguished Hebrew scholar. Still later, William Gifford, after being first a cabin-boy and then an apprentice to a shoemaker at Ashburton, was helped to go to Exeter College by a local surgeon, and gained a bible clerkship. This assisted him to complete the education which enabled him to take a leading position in the literary and political world. He remembered his own rise in life, and founded the Gifford exhibition at Exeter College for poor boys from Ashburton school.

The fellows had their rooms free, and the rent of Hart Hall, about £2 a year, was devoted to keeping their rooms in repair. They had also an annual payment of ten shillings a year each, the Rector and Chaplain receiving double. Each fellow was also allowed ten pence a week for his 'commons,' but a proportion was deducted for each day that a fellow was absent, and so of his yearly allowance if he was absent for more than four weeks in the year. We also find a sum of 3s. 4d. allowed for 'visiting friends'; and some clothes (liveries) were supplied apparently once in three years. In 1544 the arrangement about liveries is as follows: on the feast of All Saints every third year each fellow who is M.A. is to receive 20s., each B.A. 16s. 8d., others 13s. 4d., subject, however, to the rule that £20 at least shall always be reserved in the college chest; at the same time an improvement was made in the commons, especially in what were called 'thirteen penny commons,' i.e. on twenty feast days. The common chest had three keys kept by the Rector, Senior Fellow, and Chaplain respectively, and there is still an old chest of this description in the muniment room. The allowance of ten pence a week for commons may seem small, especially as the arrangement was made just after the great famine of 1315, probably the time of greatest dearth that England ever experienced, but Exeter was a poor college, and the sum allowed in some of the richer colleges at Oxford was not much larger. At Exeter the allowance was raised to a shilling in 1408. The last twenty years of the fourteenth century had been singularly abundant but afterwards prices rose. In 1326 the Oriel statutes gave twelve pence as the sum, which was to be made fifteen pence in times of scarcity. In 1340 the Balliol statutes allow eleven pence, which might be raised to fifteen pence when food was dear. Merton in 1270 and 1274 allowed 40s. before determining and 50s. afterwards, part for the weekly commons, the rest to be paid at the end of the year, and in 1284 Archbishop Peckham checked an attempt of the fellows to increase the sum.

The hall and kitchen are of course constantly mentioned. They were not on the site of the present hall and kitchen, but more to the north. There was a large washing basin in the hall ('lavacrum') with a pipe to it (fistula), and once we hear of a 'Lavacrum pendens in aula.' There are constant payments for towels . . . The Hall was lighted with torches, torticii, or rather large candles; a great torch of wax cost 3s. 6d. in Lent 1358, a torch for the hall 4s. 7d. in winter 1360, 10½d. is given for making two torches in winter 1385. Charcoal (carbones) was used for the fire, and was in fact employed in college halls till within comparatively modern times. The smoke escaped through a hole in the roof. Chimneys came into use in the fourteenth century. . . . There was a tendency to remain round the fire in hall after dinner, partly perhaps for the warmth, but still more for the sake of an occasional drinking bout (bibesia); hence several colleges have stringent rules against staying in hall after dinner. Thus at Magdalen all are to leave the hall at curfew time, hora ignitegii, except on Saints' days, when they may stay on and amuse themselves with ballads, and read historical poems, chronicles, and the wonders of the world. Candles were dear, nearly two pence a pound, that is two shillings of our money; men could not afford to read in their rooms after dark. Other young students besides Sixtus V. may have had to read by the light of the lantern hung up at the crossing of the streets. The burning candle was sometimes protected by a lantern. A very old lantern is preserved in the Ashmolean Museum. It is of bronze and the light is transmitted through crystals . . . The men, too, were much crowded in their rooms. We constantly hear of chamber fellows, and there were sometimes as many as four in one room. The churches and castles were splendid, but the inmates of collegiate houses were closely packed and indifferently lodged, while the furniture was rough and scanty. The Magdalen statutes order that in each of the better rooms there shall be two chief beds and two beds on wheels, 'lecti rotales, Trookyll beddys vulgariter appellati,' and in each of the other rooms two chief beds and one truckle bed if the size of those rooms allow of so many. The services of a rat catcher had to be called in sometimes. Autumn, 1363, '8d. to a ratter (ratornarius) when he destroyed the rats in the rooms.' The number of students then at Oxford was large. The Universities were in fact the great public schools of the country. In 1261 the expenses of a boy called 'little Stephen' at Oxford, from Christmas to Easter, were 4s. 3d.

The Library was thatched in autumn 1375, '3s. 4d. for straw and for covering the Library.' It had just received a donation: Lent 1375, "40s. for the use of the Library in part payment of 20 marks given by M. William Reed, bishop of Chichester, but temporarily used for College payments." Winter 1385, '3d. for repairing two books, 1d. for paper, 2s. 5d. for glass in the great window of the Library.' In the east window was the picture of a man kneeling, with his gown and formalities on him, with this inscription, 'Pray for the soul of M. William Palmer of this place, who caused this chapel to be lengthened.' The Library had been the founder's chapel. Palmer was physician to Margaret of Anjou, and his name was well known in the west, as he built Greystone Bridge over the Tamar near Launceston, thus fulfilling a promise made in his schoolboy days, perhaps when at Launceston school.

The books were chained to desks, and some of them kept in chests: Lent 1441, 2d. for a hanging lock for a book-chest. A new Library was built in 1383.

The bishops of Exeter were kind patrons. Bishops Grandisson, Lacy, and Brentingham gave books. Bishop Stafford obtained a bull for the fellows from Innocent VII., and he built a new gate at the west end of the College, and a chamber under the old Library . . .

Henry V., who is said to have been educated under Cardinal Beaufort's care at Queen's, had always taken much interest in Oxford matters. His father had been displeased with the University when it resisted a Visitation by the archbishop, and Prince Henry defended its liberties. Benedict Brente, a fellow of Exeter College, was one of the proctors who were compelled to resign on this occasion, and was committed to the Tower. As soon, however, as the University could assert its liberty they were re-elected. Prince Henry was attached to Richard II., who had treated him kindly, and on his accession to the throne he restored Richard's friends to their possessions. Henry IV. was supported by his nobles and the higher clergy, but Richard met with support from many of the clergy and the lower classes. Henry V. succeeded in conciliating both parties.

Several members of the College were somewhat closely connected with the House of Lancaster. William Palmer, mentioned above, was physician to Margaret of Anjou. John Arundell, another fellow, was physician to Henry VI. Another, Michael Tregury had been chaplain to Henry V., and was made by Henry VI. Rector of the University of Caen during the English rule in Normandy, on which occasion Paris remonstrated with Oxford on the unkindness of setting up a rival University against the mother University of Europe. Paris, however, was also suffering from the rise of a new University at Bourges. In fact, after its great effort at the Council of Constance, through Gerson and D'Ailly, the University of Paris steadily declined. Tregury became Archbishop of Dublin, and his tomb was discovered at S. Patrick's, in 1730, by Dean Swift. It may have been this connection with the royal family that induced Henry V.'s executors (one of whom was Edmund Lacy, bishop of Exeter) to give the College 50s. 8d., and Cardinal Beaufort's executors a larger sum

Exeter College is favourably known in connection with the men who were helping forward the Revival of Learning. William Grocyn taught Greek in the College Hall, and Richard Croke sojourned in the College for some time. We find the College twice entertaining Grocyn's friend Dean Colet. The Cornelius mentioned several times in the Computi was probably Cornelius Vitelli, a learned Italian, who taught Greek in the University. Lent 1491, '6d. for a new lock for the door of the fuel-house of Cornelius, and 3d. for a key to his study. . . .

The Valor Ecclesiasticus of 1535-6 gives a complete view of the revenues of the College at this time which only amounted to £83 2s., out of which the Rector and Chaplain have each £4 0s. 4d., thirteen fellows £3 10s. 4d. each. The Rector and Fellows petition that the present allowances may be continued, viz., the barber 10s., laundress 13s. 4d., cook 13s. 4d., manciple £3 6s. 8d., chapel expenses £3, the Rector 20s., the Fellows £6 10s., besides 50s. for visiting their friends. Henry VIII. had no intention of taking the University property, only he required the establishment of public lectures, and hence we now find payments mentioned for lectures in philosophy and theology. The College Register begins in 1539, and henceforth our information is clearer. This may not be unconnected with Cromwell's order in the injunctions of 1538 that every parish clergyman should henceforth keep a Register

Besides the valuable (Sarum) Breviary, the College also possesses nine other Sarum books of various kinds. The destruction of the old service books at the time of the Reformation was, perhaps, not so extensive as is usually supposed. A far more complete destruction fell on the Protestant Service Books and Bibles. The Library has only two copies of Tyndale's New Testament (No. 3 and No. 5 in Mr. Fry's list), and of the latter only two other copies are known. The "Dialogue between a Christian father and his stubborn son," written by William Roye, Tyndale's assistant, has only survived in one copy at Vienna, from which Adolf Wolf republished it in 1874; the only known MS. of Wiclif's treatise "De Officio Pastoralis" is also at Vienna.

In 1547 a Devonshire fellowship was given to Maurice Ley, an Irishman, for Dr. Cox, the chief of the Royal Visitors, was pressing every College to take one Irish fellow for the benefit of Ireland, and to strengthen the English Church there, but Ley soon vacated and the plan seems not to have been further carried out. The annual election of Rectors now came to an end. William More was continued in office by Edward VI.'s visitors, but his term of office ceases abruptly at Mary's accession, when the Queen's Visitors put a medical fellow, William Corindon, in his place

. . . . The endowment of Exeter College, however, came from some lands which Sir William Petre had purchased of Queen Elizabeth for the purpose, the Queen's urgent need of money forcing her to part with considerable portions of the Royal possessions The Revenue of the College was more than doubled by Petre, but the valuable ground on which the College stood all came from the old foundation 'Petre also gave the College a curious Latin Psalm-book which had been the family

Bible of the Tudors, the most learned royal family in Europe. It is from it that we know the birthday of Henry VII., 28th Jan., 1457.'

Elizabeth's Charter of Incorporation is dated 22nd March, 1566. She empowered William Alley, S.T.P., the Bishop of Exeter, to draw up new statutes for the College, with the advice and consent of Sir William Petre. Under these new statutes the Rector was to be at least a Master of Arts and thirty years of age, but not a Bishop; and no one was to be elected a Fellow who had more than ten marks of inheritance or life interest. The day of election was 30th June, the morrow of S. Peter and S. Paul The Rector's stipend was to be 20s., that of the chaplain 26s. 8d., of the fellows 10s. each. There are regulations about dress and about not entering the Buttery without leave, and all gaming is forbidden—except that at the usual festival times, All Saints day, Christmas, and Candlemas, the fellows might play 'pictis cartis vulgo cards' in hall at proper hours, and for a moderate sum. Latimer's famous 'Sermons on the Card,' delivered on the Sunday before Christmas, had a special relevancy to the approaching season. Shooting inside the College is forbidden, and no one may keep hunting dogs, ferrets, rabbits, hares, or hawks within the precincts. The Bible was to be read during meals in hall, and no one was to talk while the appointed portion of Scripture was being read; afterwards they might talk in Latin or Greek, but not in English—except on great feasts, or unless strangers were present, or there was some other reasonable cause, such as College business. The Battellars were to talk Latin and Greek always while in College except they were excused for lawful reasons. The Fellows sat in messes, four to a dish, and only Masters of Arts might sit at their table unless the Rector and five seniors should give permission to some one else

Shaftesbury's account of his college career is a curious contribution to the knowledge of Oxford University life in the seventeenth century. 'I kept both horses and servants in Oxford, and was allowed what expense or recreation I desired, which liberty I never much abused; but it gave me the opportunity of obliging by entertainments the better sort, and supporting divers of the activist of the lower rank with giving them leave to eat, when in distress, upon my expense, it being no small honour among those sort of men that my name in the battery book willingly bore twice the expense of any in the University. This expense, my quality, proficiency in learning, and natural affability easily not only obtained the good will of the wiser and elder sort but made me the leader even of all the rough young men of that College and did then maintain in the schools coursing against Christ Church, the largest and most numerous College in the University.

The troubles of the civil war now (1642) began, and as Oxford became the King's head-quarters and most advanced post on the road to London, the students joined the army in large numbers and the work of education was nearly suspended. The College plate offered the King a ready resource for the war. The Colleges, considering themselves as trustees of the plate and other property, at first hoped to buy themselves off with ready money; thus Exeter presented the King with £310, of which £138 had to be borrowed, but the King's needs were too pressing and he took the plate as well, promising, however, repayment; it was valued at £750, the pound weight of silver plate being reckoned as worth £3, and of gilt plate somewhat more. This, of course, allowed nothing for the workmanship. The only part of its old plate which the College now possesses is an egg set in gold. The College also paid some of the King's foot soldiers for a month at four shillings a week each. Several of the fellows became officers in the Army, such as Matthias Prideaux, son of the Rector, and Digory Polwhele, who, when expelled by the Parliamentary Visitors is termed a "scandalous person and a man of blood." He was one of the last of those who held out for the King in Pendennis Castle. The College had also contributed a very eminent officer to the Royal cause in the person of Sir Bevil Grenville, one of the leaders of the Cornish force, which won victory after victory for the King till Grenville fell at the battle of Lansdowne near Bath and with him the western army lost its onward impulse.

. The ejection on S. Bartholomew's Day deprived Oxford and the Church of some of their best men, and was quite contrary to the spirit of the union of the two great parties which had brought about the Restoration. Twice in successive generations, in 1662 and 1689, the Church of England lost some of her best sons. She suffered on either hand. By the ejection of 1662, through the too stringent nature and enforcement of the new act of uniformity, she lost the services of some of the most devoted of her Puritan sons, men whose views were no way distinguishable from those which had been held without rebuke by some of the most honoured Bishops of Elizabeth's time. By the ejection of the non-jurors in 1689 many high minded men of a different order of thought were driven, if not from her communion, at all events from her ministrations. She lost successively some of the most earnest and disinterested upholders of the Protestant and Catholic elements of her constitution, and this partly accounts for the spiritual deadness of the eighteenth century, though there were also more general causes at work all over Europe to produce that deadness. An attempt was made by John Walker, a fellow of Exeter College, in his famous book called "The Sufferings of the Clergy in the Great Rebellion" to justify the ejection of 1662 by showing how many royalist clergy had been ejected previously, so that the Act of 1662 might be considered a sort of legitimate revenge. But the Royalists did not return in 1660 after a victory over their enemies. They returned by virtue of a union between the two great parties analogous to that which had closed the Wars of the Roses; and though the Declaration of Breda reserved the whole of the religious question for the consideration of Parliament, yet that Declaration was certainly not carried out fairly when the ministry and the bishops used their influence in Parliament to prevent any toleration. The King himself complained of the conduct of the bishops and other leading churchmen in this matter. The result of their action was disastrous in the University as elsewhere.

A revival of interest in Academical studies is shown by some new foundations. In 1710 Meriel Symes, of Somerset, founded an exhibition for a poor scholar at Exeter College. In 1715 Dr. Hugh Shortridge, acting for Dame Elizabeth Shiers, founded two new fellowships for Herts and Surrey, though it was not until 1744 that they were actually created. Shortridge also gave the Library the best part of its existing funds, and founded a fund for buying advowsons for the College. Dr. John Reynolds founded the Reynolds exhibitions at the College in 1756, three from Eton and three from Exeter. St. John Eliot founded the two Eliot exhibitions from Truro school, and Chancery settled the details of the scheme in 1767.

Some of the fellows of this time redeemed the fame of the College. Joseph Attwell, George Stinton and Francis Milman (a learned physician) were fellows of the Royal society. John Upton was known for his edition of Arrian's Epictetus and of Spenser's Faerie Queen, and for his Observations on Shakspere, Benjamin Kennicott was the leading Hebrew scholar of his day and collated the Hebrew MSS. of the Bible; William Holwell Carr made a fine collection of Italian paintings which he bequeathed to the National Gallery, Demainbray was royal astronomer at Richmond, and Stephen Peter Rigaud was Savilian professor of Astronomy.

One of the fellows, Thomas Broughton, had already come under John Wesley's influence in 1732, before his election, and was afterwards secretary of the society for promoting Christian Knowledge. John Wesley and his brother Charles had founded the private religious society in 1730, to which its enemies soon gave the name of Methodists. Some of the fellows after the beginning of this century belonged to the evangelical school in the church, such as John David Macbride and James Thomas Holloway, but when the wave of Catholic reaction spread over Europe and England, after the close of the Revolutionary War, the College was somewhat noted for its High Church writers, of whom it may suffice to name

William Sewell, and among those who joined the Church of Rome, John Brande Morris. But here "the fires still glow under the ashes," and we must leave this part of our history to some later writer. The list of Fellows in this century shows some other distinguished names, John Taylor Coleridge and his son the present Lord Coleridge, Josiah Forshall, the editor of Wiclif's Bible, bishops of Chester Oxford and Southwell, Stephen Jordan Rigaud, bishop of Antigua, Thomas Henry Haddan, the founder of "The Guardian," Wharton Booth Marriott, canon Rawlinson, James Anthony Froude, the regius professor of History, professors Ince, Holland, Froude, Sandy, Napier, Lankester, and Pelham, George Herbert Curteis, Francis Turner Palgrave, professor of poetry. Sir Charles Turner; and among those who were not fellows men like Sir Gardner Wilkinson and Sir Charles Lyell.

In 1854 the University Commission threw all the fellowships open, and, as the College was in want of scholarships, a number of fellowships were suppressed to found scholarships, ten of them open, ten Stapeldon scholarships for (in the first place) the diocese of Exeter, and two for the Channel Islands.

V.—ORIEL COLLEGE.

By Charles L. Shadwell, Fellow, M.A., B.C.L., Bar.-at-Law.

ROYAL patronage has played a less important part at Oxford than in the sister University. The claim of King Alfred to the honour of founding its oldest College is now abandoned everywhere except in the pious traditions of the Great Hall of the University. Even at Christ Church, the undoubted creation of Henry the Eighth, there are to be found many of his sons who prefer to connect themselves with the name of Wolsey. Nowhere in Oxford are there foundations claiming Kings and Queens as their nursing fathers and nursing mothers with as good a right as the Colleges established at Cambridge by King Henry the Sixth, by his Queen Margaret, by the Lady Margaret, the mother of the Tudor dynasty, and by her grandson. Edward the Second is indeed the titular founder of the House of the Blessed Mary the Virgin, in Oxford, commonly called Oriel College. But the true honour is due to a humbler personage.

Oriel belongs to the earliest type of Oxford Colleges, that created by Walter de Merton. It was founded in 1325-6 by Royal Charter, at the suggestion of Adam de Brome, the King's Almoner. The foundation Statutes are taken mutatis mutandis from those of Merton College, the type to which the few other secular societies of earlier date were sooner or later assimilated. Oriel was modelled on Merton from the first, and only differed from its original in the slenderness of its endowments. A chief part of its scanty revenue was obtained by the impropriation of the Rectory of St. Mary's: and from this connexion it derived its earliest and for a long time its only true name, the House of the Scholars of St. Mary in Oxford. So also, its local habitation was at first to be no more than the parsonage house of the Rector: it did, indeed, move, very shortly after its foundation, into a somewhat larger mansion, la Oriole, in the adjoining parish of St. John the Baptist: and from this new residence it acquired its popular designation: but it was not equipped by its founder with new and stately buildings, such as those of Walter de Merton.

The body, founded by Adam de Brome consisted of a Provost and ten fellows only: the fellows were to be chosen after they had taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and were to carry on their studies to the higher faculties of Law, Civil and Canon, and Theology. Room may occasionally have been found for a few other inmates: a chaplain, a poor scholar or two, to read the Bible at meals and to wait on the Provost; and a few students, noble or gentle, admitted to share the Fellows' table (commensales). Such were Thomas Arundel, afterwards Archbishop of Canterbury, in the fourteenth, and Thomas Gascoyne, in the fifteenth century. But it was not till a much later date that Oriel, or indeed any other Oxford College, became a common place of education for undergraduate students.

During the fourteenth century continuous though small additions were made to the College endowments, mainly by savings out of its scanty revenue. But the main part of the College possessions came to it during the period of one hundred years, 1425-1525, a period marked also by exceptional eminence in the personal history of its members. John Carpenter, Walter Lybert, and John Hals, successively Provosts, all became Bishops, as did also Richard Praty, and Richard Peacock, Fellows of the same generation. The principal estate of the College, the manors of Wadley and Littleworth in Berkshire, was purchased about 1445 out of the gift of John Frank, Master of the Rolls, aided by the contributions of Bishops Lybert and Hals. Carpenter gave another considerable estate at Dene and Chalford in Oxfordshire. Somewhat later came the estate of Sherington, near Banbury, from William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, Visitor of the College. And in 1525, the manor of Swainswick, near Bath, was given by Richard Dudley, sometime Fellow, and Chancellor of the Church of Sarum. These benefactions materially altered the position of the College and gave it a place, not indeed on a level with the more splendid foundations of Merton, New College, and Magdalen, but still one of substantial wealth and importance. The number of fellows was raised, as a consequence of these accessions, to the number of eighteen, at which it remained to a very recent time.

The Reformation was followed by very important changes in the character and constitution of the University. It was part of the religious policy of Elizabeth and her ministers to keep a hold on the study and teaching of the great seats of learning: and this was to be effected through the machinery of the Colleges. Under the influence of the Chancellor, Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester, statutes were passed, requiring all students to be members of one or other of the Colleges and Halls. The effect of these regulations was, in a few years, to give to the ancient Colleges a wholly new character. A College was no longer only the small family of Fellows, following the rule of life prescribed for them by their founders' statutes; but it became an integral part of the University. Hitherto the Colleges had been places of learning within the University, but not even in the aggregate, co-extensive with it: the bulk of the students were independent, or as they would now be called, non-collegiate. Henceforth, the Colleges and the University became for many important purposes, identical: and in popular language to go to the University was to go to College. Oriel now became, what it has continued ever since, an educational establishment, receiving students of all conditions, subject to strict discipline, and directed in their University studies by tutors, appointed by the Head of the College out of the Fellows of the ancient society. The occupation of the Fellows was the instruction of their pupils, rather than that continuation of their own studies, which had been the aim of their original foundation.

An immediate consequence of this change at Oriel was the demolition of the existing fabric: and the erection on its site of new buildings, suitable to the altered conditions. This work was begun in 1618, when the south and west sides of the present front quadrangle were erected: the north and east sides, with the Hall and Chapel, were completed in 1642. No part of the old Oriole was preserved. The cost was wholly defrayed by the contributions of the members of the College, past and present: Provosts Blencowe, Lewis and Tolson, whose arms were till recently to be seen on stone shields round the quadrangle: the Earl of Kingston and Sir Robert Harley, commemorated in like manner in the windows of the College Hall, were some of the principal benefactors. The northern part of the site was for sometime reserved as a garden or grove: but early in the eighteenth century two additional blocks of buildings were erected by Dr. Robinson, Bishop of London, and formerly Fellow, and by Provost Carter. The present Library, at the extreme north end of the garden, was built in 1786, to receive the collection of books from Stoneleigh Abbey, the bequest of Edward, Lord Leigh. Further extensions of building were made on the East side at the beginning of the present century. Even with these additions the accommodation for students within the walls remains very limited: the present number of sets of rooms falls considerably short of sixty. And the confined site, in the heart of the town, and closely shut in by streets, forbids any great expansion. By recent legislation it has been provided that St Mary's Hall, which adjoins the College on the north, shall before long be united with Oriel: this accession will admit at a future time of the extension of the College to the High Street, bringing it face to face with the Church with which its original foundation is so closely connected.

The most eminent names among the former members of Oriel in previous centuries are those of Sir Walter Raleigh: Lord Holt, Chief Justice of England: William Talbot, Bishop successively of Oxford, Salisbury and Durham: Charles Talbot, his son, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain: Bishop Robinson, already referred to, Lord Privy Seal, and negotiator of the Peace of Utrecht: Joseph Butler, Bishop of Durham: William Gerrard Hamilton: and Gilbert White, fifty years Fellow. But it is in a more recent period that the fame of the College has reached its highest level.

Although, as has been stated, Oriel, like the rest, opened its doors to students outside the corporate body, it remained in one respect singular among its sister-foundations. There existed no body of junior members, elsewhere called Scholars, with rights or expectations of succession to Fellowships. The choice of Fellows remained, with a few exceptions in favour of certain counties and dioceses, open to the whole University. And it was this peculiar liberty that enabled the College at the close of the last century to take the decisive step which lifted it into eminence. From 1795, when Edward Copleston of Corpus was invited, on account of his high academical reputation, to fill the vacant Fellowship at Oriel, the principle was firmly maintained of selecting upon merit alone, without considerations of interest or favour. The result was in a short time to make the Oriel Fellowship the highest prize of an Oxford career. Among those, whose names under these conditions have been placed on the Oriel roll, the following are some of the most eminent: Archbishop Whately: Dr. Arnold: Dr. Pusey: Cardinal Newman: Dr. Hampden, Bishop of Hereford: John Keble: Richard William Church, Dean of St. Paul's: James Fraser, Bishop of Manchester: Matthew Arnold: Arthur Hugh Clough and many others.

GREEK HALL, NOW DEMOLISHED.—From an engraving by Skelton.

VI.—QUEEN'S COLLEGE.

UMBERLAND and Westmorland were in a waste and uninhabited condition when Robert of Eglesfeild founded in Oxford the "Hall of the Scholars of the Queen." A preference was therefore to be given in the election to the foundation, which was in theory open, to natives of these counties. The result was for five hundred years practically to confine the foundation to natives of the two counties, and they still seem to look to the College as their alma mater.

The Royal licence for the foundation of the College was sealed in the Tower of London January 18, 1341, as we should say, 1340 as men then said, and the statutes were sealed in Oxford on the tenth of February in the same year.

The name was given to the College by the founder in honour of Philippa, wife of Edward III., whose confessor he was, and she and the Queens consort of England who should come after her were to be its patronesses. Henrietta Maria, wife of Charles I., Caroline, wife of George II., Charlotte, wife of George III. have been the patronesses who have done most, since Philippa, for the well being of the College.

The College was founded for "the cultivation of Theology to the glory of God, the advance of the Church, and the salvation of souls."

It was to consist of a Provost and twelve Fellows, the number being chosen with reference to the number of our Lord and His Apostles. After various fluctuations the number of Fellows has of late, under the pressure of agricultural depression, had a tendency to revert to the Founder's number.

There seem always to have been other residents in the College besides the members of the Foundation

Some of the characteristic customs of the College have been preserved from the founder's day to the present. His horn is still used on gaudy days as the loving cup.

On New Year's Day the Bursar presents each guest with a needle threaded with silk of a colour suited to his faculty, and prays for his prosperity in the words "Take this and be thrifty." The needle and thread (aiguille et fil) are to remind the receiver of the founder's name.

On Christmas Day a boar's head is brought into the College Hall before dinner with a carol, some centuries old, and adorned now as for more than two hundred years with banners bearing coats of arms.

In the statutes a "clarion" is ordered to be blown before meals, and still it resounds through each quadrangle to summon the members of the College to dinner.

In the statutes the Fellows are ordered to sit on one side only of the table, and now as then the Provost or his representative sits in the midst with the rest on each side.

In the statutes the chaplain was ordered to read the Bible before them as they sat at table, and till the beginning of the present century a trace of the custom was still observed.

From very early times too seems to have come down the name Taberdar or Tabarder which was at one time applied to the Junior Members of the Foundation who had proceeded to the degree of B.A. but were not yet Masters of Arts, and is now given to the eight senior open scholars.

The College has shared the fortunes of the University in the various phases of its history. Wyclif lived in the College and Nicholas of Hereford, who translated the Old Testament for him, was a Fellow. Henry Whitfield, Provost, and three Fellows were expelled for Wycliffism.

At the Reformation members of the College suffered on both sides.

When King and Parliament fall out the College has to send 193lb. 3oz. 1dwt. of silver plate to the "mint at Newe Inne" to be "there turned into money to pay his majestie's armies." In the Puritan times a number who will not submit to the parliamentary visitors are expelled. Some survive to be restored to their places when the King comes home again.

The chief benefactors of the College, besides its Provosts, have been Sir Joseph Williamson, Secretary of State, who in 1666 presented a magnificent silver trumpet and contributed largely to the expense of rebuilding the College at the end of that century; John Michel, who founded eight fellowships, four scholarships and eight exhibitions, now merged in Eglesfeild's foundation; Lady Elizabeth Hastings, who gave an estate in Yorkshire, which now supports more than twenty-five exhibitioners; Robert Mason, who gave £30,000 to the Library and so raised it to one of the highest places among the libraries of Oxford; and Sir Edward Repps Jodrell, who in these last days has founded five scholarships.

Among its most distinguished alumni have been Edmund Gibson, Bishop of London, the author of Codex Juris Ecclesie Anglicanæ; the antiquaries Archbishop Nicolson, Bishop Tanner and Edward Rowe Mores; Bishop Van Mildert of Durham; Archbishop Thomson of York; John Mill, the editor of the Greek Testament; Halley the astronomer, Mitford the historian of Greece, Jeremy Bentham and Lord Jeffrey.

About two hundred years ago the College, which is represented in Loggan's print, was entirely pulled down and gradually replaced by the present buildings. Through the liberality of the Corporation of the City a frontage to the High Street was obtained, and in the course of sixty years the whole of the present buildings were completed. The library was first taken in hand by Provost Halton; the east and south fronts of the front quadrangle were the last to be finished. The woodcut, by Green, shewing the eastern side about 1730 shows the ruins of the east window of the old chapel before they were finally cleared away. The east of the Florentine Boar, given to the College by Sir Roger Newdigate, and shown in the sketch from Ingram of the Upper Library before the old reading desks were removed to make room for new bookcases, is now on loan in the University Art Galleries in the Taylor Building. The design for the south front of the Hall and Chapel is said to have been sketched for Hawkesmoore by Sir Christopher Wren.

J. R. MAGRATH, Provost.

For a much fuller account of this college by the provost, see the "Colleges of Oxford," by A. Clark, M.A., Methuen, London, 1891.

VII.—NEW COLLEGE.

PRIMARILY New College was intended to be a stronghold of the old mediæval system in Church and State, and a bulwark against the Lollardism by which it had recently been shaken. It was to increase the supply of clergy, which the Statutes declare to have been thinned by "pestilences, wars, and the other miseries of the world." . . . In the number of the scholars, in the liberality of their allowances, in the architectural splendour of the buildings of his College, Wykeham eclipsed all previous Oxford College-founders. In many respects the founder of Queen's had, indeed, aimed as high as Wykeham; but he had begun to build and was not able to finish; he never succeeded in providing for the seventy scholars whom he contemplated. What Eglesfield designed, Wykeham accomplished.

The most original feature of Wykeham's design was the connection of his College at Oxford with a grammar school at a distance. . . .

Hard by his own cathedral, William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, erected a College for a Warden, Sub-warden, ten Fellows, a Head Master, Usher, and seventy scholars, with a proper staff of chaplains and choristers. From this College exclusively were to be selected the seventy scholars of "St. Marie College of Wynchester in Oxford"; and no one could be elected before fifteen or after nineteen, except in the case of "Founders-kin" scholars, who were eligible up to thirty. This implies that the usual age of Wykehamists upon entering the University would be much above the average, since it was quite common for boys to begin their course in Arts at fourteen or earlier . . .

The Oxford College consisted of a Warden and seventy "poor clerical scholars," together with ten "stipendiary priests" or chaplains, three stipendiary clerks, and sixteen boy-choristers for the service of the chapel. It entered on a definite existence not later than 1375, the scholars being temporarily lodged in Hart Hall (now Hertford College), and other adjoining houses while the buildings were being completed. The foundation charters were granted in 1379; the foundation stone laid at 8 a.m., on March 5th, 1379-80; on April 14th, 1387, at 9 a.m., the Society, "with cross erect and singing a solemn litany," marched processionally into the splendid habitation which their Founder had been preparing for them in an unoccupied corner within the walls of the town.

New College is the first, and still almost the only College whose extant building substantially represent a complete and harmonious design as it presented itself to the founder's eye. . . .

. . . Not only was the chapel a choir of cathedral magnitude, with transepts, though without a nave—henceforth the typical form of the College chapel; there was outside the wall (nowhere else could it have stood so conveniently) the great Bell-tower. There was an ample hall or refectory, the oldest now remaining in Oxford. There were Cloisters, round which every Sunday the whole College, in copes and surplices, were to go in procession, "according to the use of Sarum," and within which members of the College might be buried, by special papal bull, without leave of parish-priest or bishop. There was a tower specially provided over the hall staircase with massive doors of many locks to serve as a muniment room and treasury. There was a library, stored with books by the founder; and an audit-room on the north side of the east gate. Just outside the main entrance were the brewery and the bake-house. A spacious garden supplied the College with vegetables, and perhaps the scholars with room for such exercise as was permitted by the high standard of "clerical" behaviour demanded of Wykeham's tonsured undergraduates. And all remains now substantially as the founder designed it, marred only by the addition (in 1675) of a third story to the front quadrangle, and by the modernization of the windows.

. . . In William of Wykeham's College the ecclesiastical character is at its maximum: Wykeham aimed in fact at erecting a great Collegiate Church and an Academical College in one. The ecclesiastical duties—the masses and canonical hours were chiefly performed by the hired chaplains. But the scholars are required to go to mass daily; it is the first Oxford College where daily chapel is required. . . .

Wykeham was indeed the first College-founder, at Oxford at all events, who conceived the idea of making his college not a mere eleemosynary institution, but a great ecclesiastical corporation, which should vie both in the splendour of its architecture and the dignity of its corporate life with the Cathedral chapters and the monastic houses. . . . The warden of New College was to live, like an abbot, in a house of his own, within the College walls, but with a separate hall, kitchen and establishment. His salary of £40 was princely by comparison with the 40s., with commons, assigned to the master of Balliol, or even the forty marks allotted to the warden of Merton. . . .

Besides the commons every Fellow received an annual "livery," or suit of clothes, suitable to his University rank, but also of uniform cut and colour; and the rooms were no doubt rudely furnished at the expense of the College.

The statutes contain a comprehensive list of prohibited amusements. The founder's experience of human nature told him for instance that "after bodily refection by the taking of meat and drink, men are made more inclined to scurrilities, base talk, and (what is worse) detraction and strife," he accordingly provides that on ordinary days after the loving cup has gone round, there is to be no lingering in hall after dinner or supper (except for the usual "potation" at curfew), but on festivals and other winter-nights, "on which, in honour of God and his Mother, or some other saint," there is a fire in the hall, the Fellows are allowed to indulge in singing or reading "poems, chronicles of the realm, and wonders of the world."

Such were the modest amusements of the first Wykehamists. How was the bulk of their time passed or meant to be passed? It must be remembered that Colleges were, in the first instance, not intended for teaching-institutions at all; their members resorted for lectures to the public schools. Wykeham is the first Oxford founder who contemplates any instruction being given to his scholars in College*. By his provisions on this head he became the founder of the Oxford tutorial system. Both at Paris and in Oxford, College teaching was destined, in process of time, practically to destroy University teaching in the Faculty of Arts. But the process took place in totally different ways. The form which College-teaching has assumed in Oxford was inaugurated by Wykeham. He, or his academical advisers, saw the unsuitableness of formal lectures in the public schools as a means of teaching mere boys. Hence he provides that for the first three years of residence the scholar was to be placed under the instruction of a tutor ("Informator") selected from the senior fellows.

The character of the College during the earlier part of its history was exactly of the kind which the founder designed. In Wykeham's day the Scholastic Philosophy and Theology were already in their decadence. The history of mediæval thought, so far as Oxford is concerned, ends with that suppression of Wycliffism in 1411, which both Wykeham and his College (though not quite free from the prevalent

* Except to the grammar-boys at Merton, and the "poor boys" at Queen's.

Lollardism) had contributed to bring about. New College produced not schoolmen and theologians like Merton, but respectable and successful ecclesiastics in abundance—foremost among them, Henry Chicheley, Archbishop of Canterbury, the founder of All Souls'. It is a characteristic circumstance that a New College man, John Wytenham, was at the head of the Delegacy for condemning Wycliffe's books in 1411, all the other Doctors being monks or friars.

On the other hand, the one piece of reform which Wykeham did seek to introduce into Oxford bore fruit in due season. New College, the one College which was recruited exclusively from a great classical school, became the home of what may be called the first phase of the Renaissance movement which showed itself in Oxford. It is during the latter part of Thomas Chaundler's Wardenship (1454-1475) that traces of this movement became apparent. Chaundler's own style, as is shown by his published letters to Bishop Bekynton of Wells (himself a Wykehamist and benefactor of the College), was more correct than the ordinary "Oxford Latin" of his day; and sometime before his death he brought into the College as "Prælector" the first Oxford teacher of Greek, the Italian scholar Vitelli, who remained till 1488 or 1489, and must have imparted at least the rudiments of Greek and the desire for further knowledge to William Groeyn, the great Wykehamist, with whose name the "Oxford Renaissance" is indissolubly associated. Archbishop Warham, the patron of Erasmus (to whom the College owes the panelling of its Hall) also deserves mention among New College Humanists.

But if New College welcomed and fanned the first faint breath of the Renaissance air in Oxford wherever religion and politics were concerned, she retained that character of rigid and immobile Conservatism which the founder had sought to give it. . . .

It produced the disreputable John London (warden 1526-1542), who was foremost in the prosecution of Protestant heretics in Oxford, though afterwards employed in the dirty work of collecting evidence against the Monasteries. But the most disinterested and most learned opponents of the Reformation were also bred in Wykeham's Colleges—the men who were ejected or fled under Edward VI. rose to high preferment under Mary, and became victims again under Elizabeth—men like Harpesfield the ecclesiastical historian, Pits the bibliographer, and Nicholas Saunders, the Papal Legate, who organized the Irish Insurrection of 1579.

Ecclesiastically and politically the Great Rebellion found the College again on the Conservative side. In 1642 the then Warden, Dr. Robert Pincke, as Pro-Vice-Chancellor, took the lead in preparing Oxford to resist the Parliamentary forces. The University train-bands were wont to drill "under his eyes" in the front Quadrangle. The Cloisters were converted into a magazine; and the New College school-boys, being then turned out of their usual school, were removed "to the choristers' chamber at the east end of the common hall of the said College: it was then a dark, nasty room, and very unfit for such a purpose, which made the scholars often complain, but in vaine." These are the words of Anthony Wood, then a little boy of eleven, and a pupil in the school.

On the arrival of the Puritan Visitors in 1647, no College gave so much trouble as New College. All but unanimously the members of the foundation declared that it was contrary to their oaths to submit to any Visitor who was an actual (i.e. resident) member of the University, which was the case with the most active Visitors. Only two unconditional and one qualified submission was recorded. Forty-nine out of the fifty-three members of the foundation (choir included) then in residence were sentenced to expulsion on March 15, 1647-8. But it was not till June 6th that four of the worst offenders were ordered to move; on July 7th the order was extended to seventeen more. On August 1st, 1648, Dr. Stringer, the Warden whom the Fellows had elected in defiance of the Visitors, was removed by Parliament, and in 1649 nineteen more foundationers were "outed."

Two of "the Seven Bishops" were New College men, the saintly Ken, Bishop of Bath and Wells, and Turner, Bishop of Ely. One of their Judges, Richard Holloway, the only one who charged boldly in their favour, had been Fellow of the College till ejected by the Parliamentary Visitors.

Among the eminent New College men of later times may be mentioned Robert Lowth, Bishop of London, and author of the celebrated Lectures on the poetry of the Hebrews, died 1787; Sydney Smith, died 1845, and Augustus Hare, died 1834.

The era of reform may be said to begin with the voluntary renunciation by New College, in 1834, of its exemption from University examinations. The College still retains, indeed, the right to obtain for its Fellows degrees without "supplication" in congregation; and when a Fellow of New College takes his M.A., the Proctor still says, "Postulat A.B., e Collegio Novo," instead of the ordinary "Supplicat, etc," or (more correctly) omits the name altogether. In spite of the vehement opposition of the College, a more extensive reform was carried out on truly Conservative lines by an Ordinance of the University Commissioners in 1857. The Fellowships were reduced to forty (in 1870 to thirty); but the mystic seventy of the original foundation is maintained by the addition in 1866 of ten open scholarships to the thirty which were still reserved for Winchester men. Further, commoners were made eligible for Fellowships as well as Scholars. Half the Fellowships are still reserved for Wykehamists, that is, men educated either at Winchester or at New College. The chaplaincies are now reduced to three, and the number of lay choir-men increased.

Since that beneficent reform, ever since loyally accepted and vigorously carried forward by the Warden and Fellows, the history of the College has been one of continuous material expansion, numerical growth, and academic progress. In 1854 the society voluntarily opened its doors to non-Wykehamist commoners, whose increasing numbers soon called for the new buildings, the first block of which was opened in 1873.

We take our leave of the College with a glance at one or two of the quaint customs which have unfortunately, if inevitably, disappeared in the course of the process of modernization.

Down to 1830, or a little later, the College was summoned to dinner by two choir-boys who, at a stated minute, started from the College gateway, shouting in unison and in lengthened syllables—"Tem-pus est vo-candi-à-manger, O Seigneurs." It was their business to make this sentence last out till they reached with their final note the College kitchen.

On Ascension Day the College and choir used to go in procession to St. Bartholomew's Hospital (the remains of which may still be seen on the Cowley road, a little beyond the new church), where a short service was held, after which they proceeded to the adjoining well (Stowell), heard an Epistle and Gospel, and sang certain songs.

At the beginning of the present century the College was still waked by the porter striking the door at the bottom of each staircase with a "wakening mallet." Fellows are still summoned to the Quarterly College-meetings in this antique fashion. H. Rashdall, M.A.

VIII—LINCOLN COLLEGE.

Foundation, 1427-1430.

S RICHARD FLEMING (consecrated bishop of Lincoln in 1420), was dismayed at the attacks made by the Wyclifites on the doctrines, institutions, and property of the Church, to counteract their influence, he resolved to found within the University of Oxford, at that time comprised in his diocese of Lincoln, a College wherein students of Theology might be educated for the defence of the Church. To this end, he procured from Henry VI., 13th Oct., 1427, a charter empowering him (i) to unite into one Collegiate Church of All Saints the three contiguous parish churches of All Saints, S. Mildred's, and S. Michael's at Northgate, and (ii) to found in this Collegiate Church a College which should be called 'Collegium Beatae Mariae et Omnium Sanctorum Lincoln in Universitate Oxon.' His intention was to take down the ruinous church of S. Mildred's to provide the site for his buildings, and to employ the revenues of All Saints and S. Michael's for the sustenance of the Rector and Fellows of his College. Proceeding with this intention, Fleming issued a foundation-charter, dated 19th Dec., 1429, uniting the churches and nominating William Chamberleyn, 'in sacra Theologia scholaris,' to be first Rector of his proposed College. In April and June 1430, Fleming bought two tenements adjoining the site of S. Mildred's, and began the erection of the College by building on their site towards the Turl the western side of the old quadrangle, containing the entrance Tower, with rooms for the Rector over the gateway, and at the top of the Tower a muniment-room for the safe custody of the College title-deeds and money. The Founder died suddenly, in the midst of his work, in Jan., 1430-1, having made no provision for the completion of the buildings or the provision of revenues. The chief relic of the foundation which remains in the College is the College great seal. This represents the Virgin standing, with the Holy Child on her left arm, under a canopy, two figures kneeling at her feet; in a space over is Christ on his cross, under a canopy; beneath is the Founder's coat of arms: on each side are six saints arranged two and two in three tiers under canopies. The College small seal, with the figure of S. Hugh, is perhaps of the same date.

FIRST PERIOD, 1431-1474.—The work, which the Founder left imperfect, was carried on by several benefactors. By their influence the necessary confirmations of Fleming's foundation-charter were obtained from the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln (4th Sept., 1434), the Archdeacon of Oxford (23rd Sept., 1438), and the Archbishop of Canterbury (11th May, 1439). And when the legal status of the College was questioned by the Crown lawyers after the Yorkist Edward IV. had deposed Henry VI., the college was able to obtain from the new king a fresh charter confirming and extending their rights, 23rd Jan., 1461-2.

Between 1435 and 1437, John Forest, Dean of Wells, built the northern and eastern sides of the old quadrangle, containing rooms, library, chapel, buttery, kitchen, and hall. In 1465 Bishop Beckington's executors built a house for the Rector at the east end of the hall. The College was thus furnished with a complete set of buildings, arranged on three sides of a quadrangle with the south side open to admit air and sun.

The library was soon furnished with a goodly number of MSS., some bequeathed by the Founder, but chiefly by the gift of the Founder's nephew, Robert Fleming, who on his Italian tour had bought many finely-written MSS. of the Latin classics, and presented thirty-eight volumes of them to the library in 1465.

Lands and tenements, and moneys to purchase others, were conferred on the College by various donors, 'paupertatem et insufficientiam dotationis Collegii oculo pietatis considerantes.' By 1460 the College owned nearly 500 acres of land in Oxon, Berks, and Bucks, one of its properties being Illey Mill.

During this first period of its history the College was a very small body. Fleming had designed it for a Rector and seven Fellows, but the actual number of Fellows seldom exceeded five. There were besides a few Commoners ('commensales seu sojornantes'), graduates resident in College and paying for their rooms and diet: thus, a charter of the Archbishop of Canterbury, 19th Feb., 1450-1, is addressed 'Rectori, Sociis, et Commensalibus,' and gives such of them as are in priest's orders 'licentia celebrandi in capella' or elsewhere in College. There were also some undergraduates, 'poor scholars,' rendering menial service to the graduates. For example, the bible-clerk acted as a man-servant of the Rector; he was nominated by the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, who generally took this opportunity of sending one of their choristers to the University.

The visible relics of this first period of the history of the College are the louvre through which the smoke from the fire in the centre of the hall found its way out, a fragment of the original mullions of a window over the new fire-place in the hall, and the beacon and tun (Beckington's rebus) on the buttress on the east front of the Rector's lodgings.

SECOND FOUNDATION, 1474-1480.—In 1474 William Dagvyle, sometime Mayor of Oxford, gave by his will the reversion of his considerable property in All Saints parish, including the old possession of his family, the hostelry known then as Dagvyle's Yn, but henceforth as the Mitre. In 1475, Thomas Rotheram, translated to the Bishopric of Lincoln in 1472, gave the College the churches of Long Combe near Woodstock, and of Twyford in Bucks, besides other revenues. Perhaps because the College was now well worth plundering, the old accusation of illegality was revived; and the charter of 1 Edw. IV. was found, whether by intention or carelessness, to be so faultily written as to give very insufficient protection. Rotheram came to the rescue, moved, according to the fine tradition, by a sermon preached before him in Oxford, when he came there in his Visitation of his Diocese, by the Rector or one of the Fellows, on the text 'Behold and visit this vine which thou hast planted.' He obtained from the king a new charter, dated 16th June, 1478, which finally established the College; and he further settled the College by giving a written code of statutes, the original copy of which, with his autograph signature, is still preserved in the College archives. These statutes were given 11th Feb. 1479-80: in Sept., 1480, Rotheram was translated to the Archbishopric of York.

A pleasant memorial of the second foundation has come down to us in the college vine. In Loggan's view (1675) a vine is seen growing luxuriantly over the west wall of the hall. Its successor flourishes in the chapel quadrangle, near the window of the room traditionally regarded as John Wesley's. It bears numerous and heavy clusters of small dark-coloured grapes, some bunches of which are always presented at the college gaudy on All Saints' Day. From time to time wine even has been made from its grapes. In allusion to this vine, and to the duty incumbent on Lincoln men to give in their maturity good fruit to the world of their nurture here, these lines have been written:—

Vitis ut accrescit, sic nos accrescere jussit
Fundator: palmes, scilicet, uva, merum.

SECOND PERIOD, 1481-1536.—During the years following Rotheram's settlement of the College, the endowments were augmented by the large benefactions of William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, and Edmund Audley, Bishop of Salisbury, so that before 1518 the College had acquired 1300 acres of land in addition to its former 500 acres.

The College now consisted nominally of thirteen persons, the Rector and twelve Fellows, eight from the county and diocese of Lincoln, one from the county of Somerset, and four from the county and diocese of York; but the actual number of Fellows was generally nine. Graduate commoners, as before, resided in College; and also undergraduates to such a number that Rotheram's statutes instituted two Tutors for their instruction.

THIRD FOUNDATION, 1537.—In 1537 Edmund Darby, Archdeacon of Stow, formerly Fellow of the College, gave money with which the College bought 669 acres of land in Yorkshire; and arranged that three new Fellowships should be established, one for the county of Oxford, one for the county of Leicester or Northampton, and one for the archdeaconry of Stow.

The College now consisted of a Rector, fifteen Fellows, two Chaplains (of All Saints and S. Michael's), and one Bible-clerk, served by a manciple (who had charge of the buttery), a cook, a barber, and a laundress.

It was soon found that the College revenues could not support sixteen Members of the Foundation; the number was from time to time provisionally reduced, and finally in 1606 a Visitor's Order limited the Foundation to a Rector and twelve Fellows.

LATER BENEFICATIONS, 1538-1892.—The earlier benefactors of the College belonged to two classes. There were, first of all, laymen, and especially parishioners of All Saints, whose object was to provide for masses and anniversary services for the repose of their own and their kinsfolks' souls. There were, secondly, ecclesiastics, who added to that object a desire to advance the interests of the Church in an age when the Church was greatly assailed. These two classes of benefactors soon ceased; but very early in the history of the College, a third class arose, old members of the College, inspired by love for the house itself which had been sometime their home. Hardly a generation has passed in which the College has not received something from this source; and it may well be proud of the multitudinous benefactions of its old members, ranging from the MSS. given to the library by Thomas Gascoigne in 1432 to the contributions given in 1891 and 1892 for the restoration of the hall.

The more important of these later benefactions took the form of scholarships or exhibitions, and point to the continuous growth of the modern idea of a College as a place for the higher education of young men. The following is a list of the older scholarship foundations, with dates, and their yearly values:—

1568, Traps' scholars, four in number, value £5 6s. 8d., one by preference to be chosen from Sandwich School, Kent.

1633, Smith's exhibitioner one, value £15.

1640, Hayne's scholars, two in number, value £3 per annum: but this never took effect, perhaps owing to the confusion caused by the outbreak of the great Civil War.

1688, Marshall's scholars, four in number, value £6 10s. per annum.

1717, Lord Crew's exhibitioners, twelve in number, value £20 per annum.

1781, Hutchins' scholars, three in number.

The foundations of this century are the Tatham (1847), Radford (1851), and Matthews (1857), scholarships.

LATER HISTORY, 1538-1892.—In the history of a small community like Lincoln College we see in an intensified form the bitterness of party strife which from age to age agitated the nation. In the period of the Reformation, Henry VIII. to Elizabeth, we find numerous expulsions of Fellows for religion, and repeated attempts by the Crown to enforce its own way of thinking by the appointment, contrary to the College statutes, of outsiders to the Headship of the College. In the time of the Stuarts, and especially just before the Civil War, we find frequent brawls in College, proceeding even to blows; and these divisions continue till the expulsion in 1648 by the Puritans of the Royalists, followed in 1660 by the expulsion of the intruded Puritans by the Royalists, and in 1662 the ejection of Nonconformists on 'Black Bartholomew.' Soon the struggle is renewed; and in 1683 we have a Fellow expelled because he has spoken against passive obedience, and contrariwise in 1685 George Hickee, the most distinguished member of the College, is out-voted for the headship because he is an out-and-out advocate of the king's divine right. And so on throughout the eighteenth century, when Fellows were expelled because of their refusal to take the oaths to the House of Hanover, into the nineteenth, when the late James Bowling Mozley was passed over for a Fellowship because thought to be a 'Newmanite.'

In the midst of all this domestic strife, Lincoln has not failed from age to age to rear men eminent in the pursuits characteristic of the time. A few names may be cited—Richard Knolles, Fellow 1566-1572, whose History of the Turks (first edition, Lond. 1603), was a work of rare merit; William Gifford, Archbishop of Rheims, 1623-29, and Primate of France; Robert Sanderson, Fellow 1606-1619, the acute logician and casuist; Sir William Davenant, the restorer of the drama; George Hickee, Fellow 1664-1681, the pioneer of Northern studies, and a leader of the Non-jurors; John Potter, Fellow 1694-1706, Greek scholar, and Archbishop of Canterbury; John Wesley, Fellow 1726-1751; Nathaniel Crewe, Fellow and Rector, afterwards Bishop of Durham, and John Radcliffe, Fellow, afterwards the celebrated London physician, both better known than beloved in their lifetime, but whose princely benefactions to Oxford have blotted out the memory of their contemporary ill-repute; and, among those whose memory is still recent, William Jacobson, Bishop of Chester, James Fraser, Bishop of Manchester, and Mark Pattison.

The College has from first to last been numerically small. Its relative position, as one of the four least populous Colleges, has not altered from Elizabeth's reign to Victoria's. The following are some statements of its numbers: 1552, 26 members in residence, i.e., the Rector, eleven Fellows, and fourteen other persons; 1588, 38 members in residence, i.e., the Rector, twelve Fellows, sixteen commoners, nine servitors; 1605, 54 members in residence; 1612, 100 members, probably not all in residence, i.e., the Rector, twelve Fellows, sixty commoners, and twenty-seven battelars; 1746, 47 members in residence, i.e., the Rector, twelve Fellows, eight gentlemen-commoners, eighteen commoners, and eight servitors.

An account of the constitution and history of the College will be found in The Colleges of Oxford (Methuen, 1891).

THE VIRGIN'S CHAPEL OR LADY CHAPEL, CAT STREET, now a dwelling.—From an engraving by Skelton.

IX.—ALL SOULS'.

PIOUS Henry Chichele, the son of a merchant of Higham Ferrars, was one of the first roll of scholars whom William of Wykeham nominated at the opening of his great foundation of New College. He left Oxford with the degree of Doctor of Laws, and soon found both ecclesiastical preferment and a lucrative legal practice. He attached himself to the House of Lancaster, and served Henry IV. so well that he was made Bishop of St. David's, and sent to represent England at the Council of Pisa. In such favour did he stand at Court, that when Thomas Arundel, Archbishop of Canterbury, died in the first year of Henry V., the young king appointed Chichele to succeed him.

For the long term of thirty years Henry Chichele held the Primacy of all England, and played no small part in the governance of the realm. The two main characteristics of his policy, whatever may be urged in his defence, were most unfortunate; he was a stout supporter of the unhappy war with France, and he was a weak defender of the liberties of the Church of England against Papal aggression. History remembers him as the ambassador who urged so hotly the preposterous claims of Henry V. on the French throne, and as the first Primate who refused to accept the Archbishopric from the King and the Chapter, till he had obtained a dispensation and a Bull of Provision from the Pope.

However great may have been his faults as a statesman, Chichele (like his successor Laud) was throughout his life a liberal and consistent patron of the University. He presented it with money and books, and, mindful of what he owed to his training at New College, resolved to copy his old master Wykeham in erecting one more well-ordered and well-endowed house of learning, among the obscure and ill-managed halls which still harboured the majority of the members of the University. He first began to build a small College in St. Giles'; but this institution—St. Bernard's as it was called—he handed over unfinished to the Cistercian monks, in whose possession it remained till the Reformation, when it became the nucleus round which Sir Thomas White built up his new foundation of St. John's.

Chichele's later and more serious scheme for establishing a College was not taken up till 1437, when he had occupied the Archbishopric for twenty-three years, and was already passed the age of seventy. It was one of the darkest moments of the wretched French war; the great Duke of Bedford had died two years before, and Paris had been for twelve months in the hands of the French. The old Archbishop, all whose heart had been in the struggle, and who knew that he himself was more responsible for its commencement than any other subject of the Crown, must have spent his last years in unceasing regrets. Perhaps he may have felt some personal remorse when he reflected on his own part in the furthering of the war, but certainly—whether he felt his responsibility or not—the waste of English lives during the last twenty years lay heavy on his soul. Hence it came that his new college became a chantry as well as a place of education—the inmates were to be devoted as well ad orandum as ad studendum—hence also, we can hardly doubt, came its name. For, as its Charter drawn by Henry VI. proceeds to recite: the prayers of the community were to be devoted, "not only for our welfare and that of our godfather the Archbishop, while alive, and for our souls when we shall have gone from this light, but also for the souls of the most illustrious Prince Henry, late King of England, of Thomas late Duke of Clarence our uncle, of the Dukes, Earls, Barons, Knights, Esquires, and other noble subjects of our father and ourself who fell in the wars for the Crown of France, as also for the souls of all the faithful departed. Not unwisely, therefore, has the piety of the present generation filled the niches of Chichele's magnificent rearedos with the statues of Clarence and York, Salisbury and Talbot, Suffolk and Bedford, and others who struck their last stroke on the fatal plains of France. Nor can we doubt that the Archbishop's meaning was well expressed in the name that he gave to his foundation, which, copying the last words in the above cited foundation-charter, became known as the "Collegium Omnium Animarum Fidelium Defunctorum in Oxonia."

 When all was complete he went through the form of handing over the foundation to his young godson Henry VI., and of receiving it back from the King's hands as co-founder. Hence comes the constant juxtaposition of their names in the prayers of the College.

For the first century of the College's existence the succession of Wardens and Fellows was very rapid. The shortness of their tenure of office is easily explained; a Fellowship was not a very valuable possession, for beyond food and lodging it only supplied its holder with the "livery" decreed by the founder, an actual provision of cloth for his raiment. A Fellow's commons were fixed on the modest scale of "one shilling a week when wheat is cheap, and sixteenpence when it is dear." The annual surplus from the estates was not divided up, but placed in the College strong-box within the entrance tower, against the day of need. Moreover, as the Fellows were lodged two, or even in some cases three, in each room, the accommodation can hardly have been such as to tempt to long residence. The acceptance of preferment outside Oxford, or even an absence of more than six months without the express leave of the College, sufficed to vacate the Fellowship; and since every member of the foundation was in orders, it naturally resulted that the "jurists" drifted up to London to practice, while the "artists" accepted country livings. Only those Fellows who were actually studying or teaching in the University held their places for any length of time.

In the reign of Henry VII., when the Renaissance began to make itself felt in Oxford, All Souls' had the good fortune to produce two of the first English Greek scholars, Linacre and Latimer. The name of the latter is forgotten—the present age remembers no Latimer save the martyr-bishop; but Linacre's memory is yet green. With Grocyn and Colet he stands at the head of the roll of Oxford scholars, but in his medical fame he is unrivalled. His contemporaries "questioned whether he was a better Latinist or Grecian, a better grammarian or physician;" but it is in the last capacity that he is now remembered. He was elected to his Fellowship at All Souls' in 1484, resided four or five years, and then went to Italy, where he tarried long, taught medicine at Padua, and then returned to England to found and preside over the College of Physicians. The two Linacre professorships were both endowed by him.

The first touches of information as to the life of the fellows which are found in the College archives come from a letter of Archbishop Cranmer. The visitor complains that 'Fellows have been seen (1541) clad not in the plain livery which the pious founder devised, but in gowns gathered round the collar and arms, and quilted with silk; they have been keeping dogs in College; some of them have hired private servants; others of them have engaged in "computationibus, ingurgitationibus, crapulis et ebrietatibus." All these customs are to cease at once. It is to be feared that the good Archbishop was as unsuccessful in suppressing these smaller sins and vanities, as he most certainly was in dealing with the evil of corrupt resignations.

It was in the reign of Warden Warner, under whom Cranmer's visitation took place, that All Souls' was robbed of its greatest ornament—the decorations of its chapel. In 1449, by order of the Royal Commissioners appointed by Protector Somerset, havoc was made with the whole interior of the building. The organ was removed, the windows broken, the high-altar and seven side-altars taken down, and, worst of all, the whole reredos gutted; its fifty statues and eighty-five statuettes were destroyed, and so it remained, vacant but graceful, though much chipped about in the course of ages, till in the reign of Charles II. the Fellows in their wisdom concluded to plane down its projections, stuff its niches with plaster, and paint a sprawling fresco upon it!

On the whole, save in the loss of its Reredos, All Souls' did not suffer much from the Reformation. In Elizabeth's reign we find it flourishing greatly under Warden Hoveden. As a builder and an administrator alike he left his mark on All Souls.'

By the end of Hoveden's time a new subject of interest comes to the front in the management of the College. The rise in wealth and in prices which characterized the Tudor epoch resulted in the development of the annual surplus from the College estates into unexpected proportions. When all outgoings were paid there were often £500 or £600 left to be transferred to the strong-box in the gate-tower. It naturally occurred to the Fellows that some of this money might reasonably come their way. Archbishop Whitgift allowed them to augment their daily commons from it, and afterwards bade them commute their "livery" in cloth for a reasonable equivalent in cash. This was done, but still the annual surplus cash grew. Archbishop Bancroft directed it "to amendment of diet and other necessary uses of common charge." He soon found that this merely led to luxurious living. "It is astonishing," he wrote, "this kind of beer which heretofore you have had in your College, and I do strictly charge you, that from henceforth there be no other received into your buttery but small and middle beer, beer of higher rates being fitter for tippling houses." Yet the College strong ale still survives! Nor was it only in its drinking that the College offended: its eating corresponded; the gaudés, and the annual Bursar's dinner, became huge banquets, costing some £40; guests were invited in scores, and the festivities prolonged to the third day. Such things were only natural when the Fellows had the disposal of a large revenue, yet were not allowed to draw from it more than food and clothing. At last, Archbishop Abbott, in 1629, bethought him of a less demoralizing way of disposing of the surplus: he boldly doubled the livery money. Then for the first time a Fellowship became worth some definite value in hard cash. The next step was easy enough; instead of a fixed double livery, there was distributed annually so many times the original livery as the surplus could safely furnish.

SALT CELLAR.—From Lascelles.

The seniors drew more than the juniors, and the jurists more than the artists. This arrangement, after working in practice for many years, was sanctioned in theory also by Archbishop Sheldon in 1666.

The Civil Wars of the reign of Charles I. were an evil time for All Souls' no less than for the other Colleges of the University. All its magnificent stores of plate went to replenish the Royal mint in New Inn Hall, and to re-appear as ill-struck shillings. No new fellows were elected, rents were unpaid, the buildings began to fall into disrepair. When the war ended, and the Parliamentary Visitors got to work on the University, as much as two years after the fall of Oxford, they found only eleven members of the College in residence. Warden Sheldon was summoned before them to ask whether he acknowledged their authority, and replied with frankness, "I cannot satisfy myself that I ought to submit to this Visitation." Next day a notice of ejection was served upon him, and the day following the Chancellor Pembroke went with the Visitors to expel him. They found Sheldon walking in his little garden, read their decree to him, and then sent for the College buttery-book, out of which they struck his name, inserting instead of it that of Dr. Palmer, whom they had designated as his successor. Next they bade him give over his keys, and when he refused broke open his lodgings, installed Palmer in them, and sent the rightful owner away under a guard of musketeers, "followed as he went by a great company of scholars, and blessed by the people as he passed down the street."

The old body of fellows being expelled, the Visitors proceeded to fill up the empty places by nominating masters of arts of Puritan tendencies. But in 1653 free elections re-commenced, and as the first fruits of their labours the new Fellows co-opted Christopher Wren. This greatest of all the Fellows of All Souls' was in residence for eight years, working from the very first year of his election at architecture, though astronomy and mathematics were also taking up part of his time. Ere he had been many months a Fellow, he erected the large sun dial, with the motto percutit et imputantur, which now adorns the Library.

Palmer, the intruding Warden, died in the very month of King Charles' return, and Sheldon peaceably took possession of his old place. But within two years he was called off to become Archbishop of Canterbury, and John Meredith reigned in his stead.

Meredith's reign was short and uneventful. The College was not destined to see any more vicissitudes of importance till James II. imposed on it as head his disreputable protégé Leopold Finch, son of the Earl of Winchilsea. Finch was an execrable warden, but the College flourished in spite of him. To his time belongs the munificent foundation of its library.

It was to Christopher Codrington that the College owes the magnificent library, which so far surpasses all its rivals in the University, save the Bodleian alone. Codrington was a kind of Admirable Creighton, poet and soldier, bibliophile and statesman. In the same year he gained military promotion for his gallantry at the siege of Namur, welcomed William III. to Oxford in a speech whose elegant Latinity softened even Jacobite critics, and undertook the government of the English West India Islands. He died at Barbados in 1710, and left to his well-loved College 21,000 books, valued at £6000, with a legacy of £10,000 to build a fit edifice to hold them, and a fund to maintain it. The Codrington Library, commenced in 1716, took many years to build, but at last stood completed, a far more successful work than the hall which faces it across the quadrangle. It is 200 feet long, and holds with ease the 70,000 books to which the College Library has now swollen. A public reading-room was added to it in 1867, and it is for students of law and history as much of an institution as the Bodleian itself.

The eighteenth century gave All Souls' many brilliant Fellows, but it destroyed the original purpose of the foundation, and ended by making it an abuse and a hyword, owing to an unhappy misinterpretation of its statutes which led to the idea that the founders' kin had a preferential right to fellowships whenever they chose to present themselves as candidates.

. . . . Archbishop Cornwallis in 1777 ruled that it was not obligatory upon the College that more than ten of the Fellows should be of Founder's kin, and from this time forth the claim of Founder's kin had no direct influence upon the elections. But the doctrine had done its work. It brought the Fellowships within a charmed circle of country families, outside of which the College rarely looked when the morrow of All Souls' Day came round.

The effect of this was to create a society of an abnormal sort in the midst of a group of Colleges which, whatever their shortcomings may have been, continued to make a profession of study and teaching. The Fellows were men of good birth, and usually of good private means, but they were wholly unacademic in their tastes.

. . . . Gradually the College drew more and more apart from its neighbours, until the Fellows made it a point to know nothing and to care nothing about the teaching, the study, or the business that was going on just outside their walls.

To the great advantage of the College the University Commission of 1854 swept away the rights of Founder's kin, together with many other provisions of the Statutes of Chichele, appropriated ten Fellowships to the endowment of chairs of Modern History and International Law, and threw open the rest to competition in the subjects of Law and Modern History. The Commission of 1877 threatened graver changes, and for a while it was doubtful whether All Souls' might not become an undergraduate College of the ordinary type. But in the end the College was allowed to retain, by means of non-resident Fellowships, its old connection with the world outside, while in other ways its endowments were utilized for study and teaching. On the whole it cannot be said to have suffered more than others from the want of constructive genius in the Commissioners. It is and will be a College of many Fellows and several Professors, with liabilities to contribute annual sums to Bodley's Library and to undergraduate education. The Fellowships are terminable in seven years, but may be renewed in limited numbers and on a reduced emolument. Their regular distribution has done much to encourage the studies of Law and History in the University. For the former, All Souls' is certainly the centre and focus of all academic instruction.

Under these new conditions All Souls'—though still somewhat scantily inhabited—is no longer given over during a great part of each year to the bats and owls. It now plays a useful and important part in the University. Its Hall and lecture-rooms are crowded with undergraduates, its reading-room is full of students of Law and History, and its Warden and Fellows have produced in the last ten years about twice as many books as any two other Colleges in the University put together. Last, but not least, it has continued most loyally to fulfil its obligation of providing prize Fellowships; no other foundation can say, though several are far richer than All Souls', that it has regularly offered Fellowships for competition for twenty consecutive years.—The Colleges of Oxford.

X.—MAGDALEN COLLEGE.

THE College of S. Mary Magdalen, commonly known as Magdalen College, was founded in the reign of Henry VI. by William Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester. The founder had been appointed in 1428 to the mastership of the school at Winchester, where he also held the mastership of the Hospital of S. Mary Magdalen. In 1440, he was transferred by the King to the mastership of Eton, where he became one of the first Fellows of Eton College, and after a few years exchanged the office of Headmaster for that of Provost. In 1447, on the death of Cardinal Beaufort, he was elected Bishop of Winchester. Early in the next year he obtained from the King a license to found at Oxford a Hall, to be called S. Mary Magdalen Hall, for a President and fifty scholars. The society so founded occupied certain buildings which stood on the ground now covered by the Examination Schools of the University. In 1456 Waynflete became Chancellor, and on his appointment to that office he applied for and obtained the permission to convert his Hall into a College with permanent buildings and endowment. For this purpose he obtained possession of the buildings and lands belonging to an older foundation, the ancient Hospital of S. John Baptist. The precise date at which this Hospital had been founded is unknown. It certainly existed before the reign of John, for its Master and Brethren had received benefactions from that sovereign while he was still known as Count of Mortain. It had been endowed, and possibly refounded, by Henry III. The Hospital buildings stood outside the East Gate of the city, on the ground between the gate of the present College and the Cherwell; some portions of them are still remaining, and form part of the present College buildings. The Hospital, as a foundation, was united with the College which Waynflete now founded, by a charter dated June 12, 1458. The greater part of the members of the Hall were transferred to the new College, under William Tybarde as President, and the Hall ceased to exist. The College for some time continued to occupy the buildings formerly tenanted by the Hall, until, after long delay, caused by the political troubles of the time, Waynflete was able to fulfil his intention of providing them with a better dwelling place. In 1480 the members removed to the new buildings on the site of the Hospital and on the ground adjoining, though the work was not yet complete. They now received from the founder certain statutes, and a new President, Richard Mayew, afterwards Bishop of Hereford. Additional statutes were given in 1482, and the complete code in 1483, when the College may be said to have been finally organized by its founder. It was to consist of a President, forty Fellows, thirty Scholars called Demies, four Chaplains, eight Clerks, sixteen Choristers, a Schoolmaster, and an Usher. Besides the foundation members, the statutes allowed the admission, under certain conditions, of a small number of commoners. The Demies were to be chosen, if fit persons could be found, from places where the College held property: they were to be at least twelve years of age at the time of election, and were not to retain their places after reaching the age of 25. The Fellows were to be chosen from certain counties and dioceses. The system which afterwards prevailed, by which any vacant Fellowship was filled, if possible, by the election of a Demie born in the particular county or diocese to which the Fellowship was assigned, was not part of Waynflete's scheme, but became established as a custom. The Schoolmaster and Usher were to give instruction in grammar to the junior Demies, and to any others who might desire to receive it. Special provision was made for higher teaching by the appointment of readers in Theology, in Moral Philosophy, and in Natural Philosophy. The lectures of these teachers were to be open not only to members of the College, but to all students who chose to attend them: and it is thus possible to trace in this part of Waynflete's design the beginnings of the endowment of professorial teaching in the University. The general regulations for the government of the College were based upon the statutes given by Waynflete's great predecessor, William of Wykeham, to New College; these were the model for the statutes of Magdalen, as the latter in turn furnished the model for the statutes of the foundation of another Bishop of Winchester, in Corpus Christi College.

After the Founder's death, while the College was still under the rule of the President to whom he had committed it, its buildings received some important additions, which were perhaps fulfilments of his original design. The most notable of these was the great tower. This structure has sometimes been ascribed to the genius of Cardinal Wolsey, who was Fellow during the years (1492—1507) when it was being built. There is, however, no evidence that Wolsey had any special connection with the work. Another architectural feature of the same period is the series of "grotesques" which ornament three sides of the cloister: these were added in 1509. During the first 90 years of its existence, except for some internal dissensions, which in 1506 called for the intervention of the Visitor, the College seems to have been prosperous and well governed. This state of things is attested by the fact that the founders of Corpus Christi and of Cardinal College chose, as the first heads of their new foundations, two Presidents of Magdalen. During the greater part of this time the prosperity of the College was no doubt assisted by its possession of influential friends at Court. Mayew, who was president from 1483 to 1506, was himself in high favour with Henry VII., while Wolsey, during his greatness, showed himself a friend to his old College. But after Wolsey's fall, though some of its old members, like Stokesley, Bishop of London, held positions of influence during the latter part of Henry VIII.'s reign, the College found no patron so powerful to intervene on its behalf.

Like most of the other Colleges in Oxford, Magdalen passed through a troublous period in the reign of Edward VI., when a President legally ineligible was forced upon it in order to carry out the designs of the Council. After the accession of Elizabeth, Laurence Humphrey, one of the more prominent of the Marian exiles, who became President in 1561, used all his influence in favour of Puritanism, and for many years after his time the College remained one of the strongholds of Puritan opinions in Oxford. It was however affected in a marked degree by the reaction under the influence of Laud: and Accepted Frewen, who held the office of President from 1626 to 1644, was one of the chief supporters of Laud's measures of University reform. Under the Commonwealth, the greater part of its members were ejected by the Parliamentary Visitors, and the College became Puritan once more, so far as its occupants were concerned, until the Restoration, when the ejected President, John Oliver, was replaced, and with him the remainder that was left of the ejected Fellows and Demies. Under Oliver's successor, Dr. Pierce, the College was constantly distracted by internal strife, caused, as it would seem, by well-meant but ill-considered efforts on the part of the President and the Visitor to maintain the observance of the statutes and the traditions of good order in the general relaxation of manners and the changed conditions of University life which followed upon the Restoration. The reign of James II. brought upon Magdalen trouble of another kind. The King endeavoured to force upon the College as its President a candidate who was both legally and morally unfit for election to the office. The Fellows chose, instead of Anthony Farmer, the King's nominee, John Hough, one of their own number; and the struggle which followed forms perhaps the best known portion of College history. The King proposed Samuel Parker, Bishop of Oxford, in place of his former nominee: the College, on their part, maintained that the place of President was already filled by the statutable election of Hough, and refused to consider that election as null. The President and all but a few of the Fellows were accordingly ejected by members of the Ecclesiastical Commission, who claimed to exercise visitatorial authority on behalf of the King: the Bishop of Oxford was installed as President by the Commissioners; and under him the greater part of the Demies were ejected also. The places of almost all the members of the foundation were filled up by the intrusion, under sanction of mandates from the King, of persons belonging to the Roman communion. Finally the King gave way, and the expelled members of the College were restored by their proper Visitor, the Bishop of Winchester, a few days before William of Orange landed at Torbay. From 1688 to 1854 the history of the College was uneventful. The greater part of this period, indeed, is marked in the history of the University as a time of intellectual depression, and Magdalen was no exception to the general rule. It was by no means the only College in which, during the 18th century, learning was less important than politics, and study less attractive, to a majority of the residents, than pleasures of a lower kind. But here, as elsewhere, there were not wanting instances of men who honestly laboured in the cause of learning, even in the days of which Gibbon has left so dreary a picture. The list of members of the College during this period contains the names of many men who attained distinction in their own day, and of some who attained more enduring celebrity. To the last class belonged Dr. Routh, President from 1791 to 1854, whose death in the latter year marks in the history of Magdalen the end of the old condition of things. The same year was marked by another event, in the beginning of the University Commissions, by whose action, as well as by the action of the College itself, a great process of change has been since carried on. The principal changes introduced by the Commissions, here as elsewhere, have been those of making the Demyships and Fellowships "open," of removing the obligation to receive Holy Orders, which was originally binding upon the great majority of the Fellows, of limiting the tenure of Demyships and Fellowships, and of annexing certain Fellowships to Professorships in the University, of which the College supplies the whole or some part of the stipend. The principle change due to the action of the College itself, apart from the Commissions, has been that of the admission of Commoners to a number much greater than that contemplated by the statutes of the founder, a change gradually brought about, which has resulted in a complete transformation of the College from what it was within the memory of its older members.

XI.—BRASENOSE COLLEGE.

GUIDED in some measure by historical associations extending over 250 years, William Smyth, Bishop of Lincoln, and Mr. (afterwards Sir) Richard Sutton founded this College in 1509, as is recorded in a modern copy of the original foundation stone which is placed over the entrance to the staircase in the south-west corner of the old quadrangle, bearing the following inscription:—

“ Anno Christi 1509 et Regis Henrici octavi primo |
 Nomine divino lincoln | presul quoque sutton.
 Hanc posu | ere petram regis ad imperium |
 primo die Junii.”

The College occupies the site of several ancient Halls, and took its name from Brasenose Hall which stood in the position now occupied by the old gateway of the College. The earliest record of the name of Brasenose is in an Inquisition of the year 1278 which contains these words: ‘Item eadem Universitas habet quamdam aliam domum que vocatur Brasenose cum quatuor Scholis’ (i.e. lecture rooms). As to the origin of the name there has been much controversy, but it is now generally agreed that the most obvious derivation is the right one, and that the Hall was so called from a brazen nose forming the knocker or handle on its door. In the year 1334 there was a migration of students from Oxford to Stamford in Lincolnshire, and when Edward III. issued a mandate to compel them to return, a certain ‘Philippus obsonator Eneanasensis’ was one of the thirty-seven recalcitrants who refused to obey the order. It may be inferred that among the students who found their way to Stamford were members of Brasenose Hall, and they probably gave the name of their Hall to a similar institution at Stamford. Certain it is that an ancient Hall existed there, from time immemorial called Brasenose, of which there still remains a fourteenth century archway, originally bearing a brazen nose. It is believed that this emblem was carried away from Oxford to Stamford by the migrating students of Brasenose Hall in 1334. In 1890 it became the property of the College by the purchase of the Stamford ‘Brasenose,’ and it is now placed in the College Dining Hall. Brasenose College grew out of Brasenose Hall, and this fact is recorded in the official title of the society, as given e.g. in the College statutes of 1522:—‘The King’s Haule and Colledge of Brasenose in Oxford.’ The original foundation was for a Principal and twelve Fellows, who were all to be, if possible, natives of the diocese of Coventry and Lichfield, with a preference for natives of Lancashire and Cheshire, and especially natives of Prescot in Lancashire [the birthplace of William Smyth], and Prestbury in Cheshire [the seat of the Sutton family and probably the birthplace of Richard Sutton]. Failing fit candidates from the diocese aforesaid, the Principal and Fellows were to be natives of the diocese of Lincoln, and failing this, to be taken ‘de aptioribus et habilioribus qui in Universitate preedicta reperiri poterunt.’ Thus originated the connection of the College with the counties of Lancashire and Cheshire; it was further cemented by the subsequent foundation of two Fellowships with local qualifications, and by the endowment of various Scholarships especially (1) by Queen Elizabeth and Alexander Nowell (1572-1579), for scholars from the school of Middleton in Lancashire and other schools in the same county; and (2) by the Duchess of Somerset (from 1679 to 1686), partly for scholars educated at the Grammar School of Manchester. The Exhibitions founded by Mr. William Hulme in 1691 also tended to confirm this connection in two ways: (1) The Exhibitioners were nominated (till 1881 when a new scheme for the Hulmeian Exhibitions framed by the Charity Commissioners came into operation) by three Lancashire clergymen viz., the Warden (afterwards Dean) of Manchester, and the Rectors of Prestwich and Bury; (2) a surplus on the Hulme trust was partly employed in the purchase of advowsons of ecclesiastical benefices to be held by former Hulmeian Exhibitioners, and twenty-two out of the twenty-eight livings thus purchased are in Lancashire or Cheshire. This local connection has had considerable influence upon the fortunes of the College, the link with the Manchester Grammar School having been especially important. It may be noted that three Principals of the College at least (if not more) were Manchester school boys, viz., William Gwyn (1770), Frodsham Hodson (1809-1822), and Ashurst Turner Gilbert (1822-1842.) All local qualifications in the case of the Principal and the Fellows were abolished by the Oxford University Commission of 1854, but the Somerset Scholarships are still confined in the first instance to scholars from the Grammar Schools of Manchester and Marlborough and the Cathedral School of Hereford.

Eight Fellowships were added to those of the original foundation by various benefactors in the course of the 16th century, making a total of twenty, but by the Oxford University Commission of 1854 this number was reduced to fifteen, four of the Fellowships being converted into Scholarships, and the emoluments of a fifth being applied to purposes connected with the Professoriate of the University. Under the statutes made by the University Commissioners in 1881 the College is governed by a Principal and twelve Fellows, exclusive of supernumerary Fellows and of the Fellowship held ex-officio by the Camden Professor of Ancient History. Additional Fellowships not exceeding six in number are to be established when the corporate revenues shall be sufficient for the purpose. In 1890 alterations of statute were approved by Her Majesty in Council, enabling the Principal and Fellows—(1) to elect to a supernumerary Fellowship without emolument any former member of the Governing Body who has served the College in the office of Principal, Vice-Principal, Bursar or Tutor; (2) to elect to Honorary Fellowships distinguished persons who are, or have been, members of the College.

Open Scholarships of the annual value of £80 are provided by a charge of at least £900 a year upon the corporate revenues. The Somerset Scholarships, mentioned above, vary in value from £80 to £52 per annum. In 1842 three Exhibitions were founded by the three Misses Colquitt of Green Bank in the county of Lancaster, to assist in the education of undergraduate members of Brasenose preparing to enter Holy Orders. Their annual value is £40. In 1875 an open classical Scholarship of the value of £100 per annum was founded in memory of the Rev. John Watson, Fellow of the College 1813-32. The Hulme Exhibitions are under the existing Scheme twenty in number. Twelve are Junior Exhibitions of the annual value of £80, awarded after a competitive examination, and open to candidates of not more than twenty years of age. Eight are Senior Exhibitions of the annual value of £130, awarded, ordinarily after competitive examination, to members of the College who have been in residence for not less than six nor more than thirteen terms, and whose names have been placed in the Honours Class List at the First Public Examination in the University.

The dates of the College buildings are as follows:—The buildings in the old quadrangle including the Hall, the present Senior Common Room (originally the Chapel), and the first Library, were begun in 1509, but consisted of only two storeys. The attic storey was added early in the seventeenth century. The Chapel and the second (and present) Library were built between 1656 and 1666, in which latter year the Chapel was consecrated and dedicated to St. Chad and St. Hugh, representing the sees of Lichfield and Lincoln, of which William Smyth, the founder, was successively bishop. There is a tradition that the Chapel was designed by Sir Christopher Wren. Its architectural interest lies in the attempt to harmonise the classical and gothic styles. The roof is said to have been taken from the Chapel of St. Mary's College (now Frewin Hall). No further additions were made to the buildings till about the middle of last century, when, so far as can be ascertained, an unsightly 'lath and plaster' building was erected in the back quadrangle, to which another similar block was added in 1810, while in 1807 what had been an open cloister under the second Library was converted into sets of College rooms. In 1771 the Principal whose lodgings had been, as was originally the usual custom, over the gateway of the College, moved into a house in the High Street, thus leaving his former rooms free for the use of the College. In these different ways accommodation was found for the increasing numbers of the undergraduates. Meantime the College had long meditated the project of building a frontage on the High Street, and with a view to this had purchased most of the houses between St. Mary's and All Saints' Churches in 1736. The first design for the contemplated buildings was that of Nicholas Hawksmoore, which is engraved in the Oxford Almanack of 1723. This, however, came to nothing, as was also the case with the designs furnished by Sir John Soane in 1807 and by Philip Hardwick in 1810. The desire of the College for a frontage and an outlet on the High Street was not destined to be realised till more than seventy years after the latter date, when new buildings, which eventually displaced the two additional blocks already referred to, were begun, the architect being Mr. Thomas Graham Jackson. These buildings were erected gradually between 1882 and 1889, when a portion of the frontage on the High Street, including the new Principal's house, was completed. The completion of the remainder is now, it may be hoped, only a question of time.

As to the characteristics of the College it is allowable to quote the words of a writer who has a special knowledge of its history. "They may be described as, first and foremost, a marked but not exclusive predilection for the exercises and amusements of outdoor life, the result of sound bodies and minds, and in part, no doubt, of a long connection with old county families of a high type. And next a certain pertinacity, perseverance, power of endurance, doggedness, patriotism, solidarity, or by whatever other name the spirit may be called which leads men to do what they are doing with all their might, to undergo training and discipline for the sake of the College, and hang together like a cluster of bees in view of a common object." Brasenose is especially and justly proud of its distinction "on the river." Since the year 1837 when the records of the "eights" become complete up to the present date (December, 1892), the Brasenose boat has started head of the river on 112 days, the next highest number being that of University (63 days); the boat has never been lower than ninth. In the "torpids" since 1852 when they were first rowed in the Lent term the Brasenose boat has started head of the river 91 days, the next highest number being that of Exeter (59 days); the boat has never been lower than eighth in the torpids. It may, however, be pointed out, that it would be a very limited and unhistorical view which dwelt only on the performances of the College in matters athletic. It will be found e.g. that in the twenty years succeeding the first institution of the class lists in literae humaniores (1802-1821), during the Principalships of William Cleaver and Frodsham Hodson, Brasenose was very well represented in the schools. No College can compete during this period with Christ Church which far surpasses all others in this respect, but Brasenose is second to Christ Church, numbering twenty first-class men in literae humaniores (counting those "qui examinatoribus se maxime commendaverunt" during the years 1802-6 as being in the first class), though it is hard pressed by Oriol which is third with nineteen first classmen in that school. An examination of the lists of the University prizemen during the same period will show that Brasenose was well to the front in these also. Again, the Brasenose Calendar (1888, supplement 1889), compiled by the Rev. W. E. Buckley and Mr. Falconer Madan, gives a list of 509 Brasenose authors and bishops, of whom 152 are prior to the death of Anthony Wood in 1695, the remainder subsequent to that date. In reference to this list it may be observed that on the death of Mr. Buckley in 1892, the College obtained the collection of books by Brasenose authors (about 1500 volumes), which he had been forming for fifty years; these are now placed in the College Library together with other Brasenose books already there, and it is intended to keep up the collection by adding all other books or pamphlets written by Brasenose men which the College is able to procure.

Among the most distinguished alumni of the College the following may be mentioned:—

Alexander Nowell, Fellow of Brasenose 1536, Principal 1595, Dean of St. Paul's 1560; John Foxe, the "Martyrologist," matriculated c. 1533; Thomas Egerton, afterwards Baron Ellesmere and Earl of Bridgewater, matriculated c. 1556, Lord Chancellor 1603, Chancellor of the University of Oxford 1610-16; Sir Henry Savile, matriculated c. 1561, Warden of Merton College 1585-1621, founder of the Savilian Professorships of Geometry and Astronomy; Robert Burton, the author of the Anatomy of Melancholy, matriculated 1593, student of Christ Church 1599; Sir John Spelman, the antiquary, who came to study in Brasenose about 1641 and died there in 1643; Elias Ashmole, matriculated 1644, founder of the Ashmolean Museum; Sir William Petty, Fellow of Brasenose 1650, Professor of Anatomy at Oxford 1651; Dr. John Latham, matriculated 1778, President of the Royal College of Physicians 1813-19; Reginald Heber, matriculated 1800, Bishop of Calcutta 1823-6; Richard Harris Barham, the author of the Ingoldsby Legends, matriculated 1807; Henry Hart Milman, matriculated 1810, Fellow of Brasenose 1814-19, Professor of Poetry at Oxford 1821-31, Dean of St. Paul's 1849-68; Frederick William Robertson, matriculated 1837, minister of Trinity Chapel, Brighton, 1847-53.

The College Hall contains portraits of the following persons:—

The two Founders; John, Lord Mordaunt, founder of three scholarships (1571); Joyce Frankland, foundress of one Fellowship, four scholarships and other benefactions (1586-98); Baron Ellesmere; Robert Burton; Sarah, Duchess of Somerset, foundress of the Somerset Scholarships; Dr. John Latham; and several Principals of the College, viz.:—Alexander Nowell (1595); Samuel Radcliffe (1614-48); Thomas Yate (1648 and 1660-81); Francis Yarborough (1745-70); William Cleaver (1785-1809); Frodsham Hodson (1809-22); Ashurst Turner Gilbert (1822-42); Edward Hartopp Cradock (1853-86).

The Arms or Badge of the College may be thus described:—The escutcheon divided into three parts paleways, the centre or, thereon an escutcheon charged with the arms of the See of Lincoln (gules, two lions passant gardant in pale or, on a chief azure Our Lady crowned, sitting on a tombstone issuant from the chief, in her dexter arm the Infant Jesus, in her sinister a sceptre, all or), ensigned with a mitre* all proper: the dexter side argent, a chevron sable between three roses gules seeded or barbed vert, being the arms of the Founder William Smyth: on the sinister side the arms of Sir Richard Sutton, of Prestbury, knight, viz., quarterly first and fourth, argent a chevron between three bugle-horns stringed sable, for Sutton, second and third, argent a chevron between three crosses crosslet sable, for Southworth.

* Two MS. authorities in the Herald's college give the mitre as azure.

XII.—CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE.

RICARD FOXE, Bishop of Winchester and Lord Privy Seal to Kings Henry VII. and VIII., was the Founder of this College. The Foundation Charter was signed on March 1, 1513, and the first President and Fellows placed in corporal possession of the buildings on March 5, following. Foxe, who was a great favourite of Henry VII., and practically his Prime Minister, was successively Bishop of Exeter, Bath and Wells, Durham, and Winchester, then the richest See in England. The principal event in his life (at least in its far-reaching consequences) was his negotiation, while Bishop of Durham, of the marriage between James IV. of Scotland and the Princess Margaret, eldest daughter of Henry VII., which resulted, a century later, in the permanent union of the English and Scottish Crowns under James VI.

Amongst the principal benefactors of the College have been Hugh Oldham, Bishop of Exeter, an intimate friend of the Founder, who persuaded him to change his original plan of a College for the education of young monks, connected with the Monastery of St. Swithin at Winchester, into one for students training for the secular or parochial priesthood; William Frost, the Founder's Steward; John Claymond and Robert Morwent, the two first Presidents; Richard Pate, Founder of the Cheltenham Grammar School, who died in 1588; Sir George St. Paul, Bart., who died in 1613, and his wife Frances, subsequently Countess of Warwick; and, lastly, Thomas Turner, President from 1687 to 1714, who built the Fellows' Buildings and bequeathed his valuable library to the College.

The Statutes, given by the Founder himself, are of peculiar interest, both on account of the vivid picture which they present of the domestic life of a mediæval College, and of the provision made for instruction in the new learning introduced by the Renaissance. Their greatest novelty is the institution of a public lecturer, or Professor, in Greek—the first instance, in either University, of the creation of a recognised and permanent office for the purpose of giving instruction in the Greek language. There were also to be Professorships of Humanity (or Latin) and of Theology, but the latter appears never to have been actually filled. Instead of it, there appears to have been, during the early years of the College, a Lectureship in Mathematics, the holder of which was the famous Bavarian astronomer, Nicolas Kratzer. The first occupant of the chair of Humanity was the celebrated Spanish humanist, Ludovicus Vivès, and of the chair of Greek, Edward Wotton, subsequently Physician to Henry VIII.

Erasmus, writing, shortly after the settlement of the infant society, to John Claymond, the first President, in 1519, speaks (Epist. ed. Le Clerc, No. 438) of the great interest which had been taken in Foxe's foundation by Wolsey, Campeggio, and Henry VIII. himself, and predicts that the College will be ranked "inter præcipua decora Britanniae," and that its "trilinguis bibliotheca" (i.e. in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew) will attract more scholars to Oxford than were formerly attracted to Rome. This language, though doubtless exaggerated, shows the great expectations formed by the promoters of the new learning of this new departure in academical institutions.

The Founder, throughout his statutes, fondly describes his College as "alvearium nostrum," our bee-hive. And truly it was a busy hive of learning. The students were to attend early mass at five in the morning. Some of the lectures began at six. Besides the lectures, there were constant disputations in the Hall, exercises to be performed, and examinations to be passed in the evening on the work of the day. Even the Vacations were mainly a respite from University exercises; the College work, though varied in subject-matter, with less of logic and philosophy and more of literature, going on, in point of quantity, much as usual. The domestic life was simple, and the discipline severe. The Fellows and Scholars were to sleep two and two in a room (a limitation which was a distinct advance on the existing practice at other Colleges), the Fellow in a high bed, and the Scholiar in a truckle bed. In the Hall, there were two meals in the day, dinner at eleven, and supper about five or six,

At these meals the Students were only allowed to converse in Latin or Greek. They were not allowed to go out of College, except to the University Schools, without special leave, nor unless accompanied by some other student. The gates were finally closed at eight in the winter, and nine in the summer. Any breach of rules was severely punished, and the punishment seems to have invariably followed on the offence. But this pristine discipline and laborious mode of life seem to have succumbed to the religious troubles of Edward the Sixth's reign, and never to have been wholly revived.

We are peculiarly fortunate in obtaining a glimpse of the interior life of the College within a quarter of a century of its foundation. Laurence Humfrey, President of Magdalen and Regius Professor of Divinity, in his life of John Jewel, the illustrious theologian who was subsequently Bishop of Salisbury, has given us a graphic and tolerably full account of his academical career, and specially of that part of it which was spent within the walls of Corpus. He had come up, when only 13 years of age, to Merton, where he held a Postmastership. The endowment of a Postmastership was, at that time, slender, nor did it, like a Scholarship at Corpus, lead to a Fellowship. Hence, for his pecuniary as well as his educational advancement, his Merton Tutors were anxious to place him at Corpus. Accordingly, in August 1539, he stood for a Scholarship and was duly elected. The lectures, disputations, exercises, and examinations prescribed by the Founder seem still to have been retained in their full vigour, though it is curious to find that the author with whom young Jewel was most familiar was Horace, whose works were strangely omitted from the list of Latin books recommended in the original statutes. Jewel, on entering the College, was at once placed in the first Logic class, where he made rapid progress, soon outstripping his class-mates, though they were senior to him in age. At dinner, he attracted attention by his recitations and declamations, and his exercises, generally, were such as to earn the warm approbation of the President and other authorities of the College. His industry was unintermitting. He rose at four in the morning (one hour before the first Mass), went to bed 'late' (at ten o'clock), and often spent whole days in the Library. Under these incessant labours his health broke down, for his body was feeble, and his food was too simple and 'scholastic'; a word which aptly marks the fact that plain living, hard work and early rising were the order of the day in the English Universities during the first half of the sixteenth century, before they became a common resort of rich men's sons, and while strict discipline was still maintained in the Colleges. During an attack of the plague, when the 'Somato-christiani' (as the members of Corpus were then commonly called) had retired to their sanatorium at Witney, he suffered so much from the cold, probably from want of a bedroom, as to contract a lameness in one foot which caused him to limp for the rest of his life. Truly, in those days, the approach to learning was by no easy or luxurious path!

At a due interval after proceeding to his B.A. Degree, Jewel began to take pupils both in his chamber and in the public rooms of the College. The ardent student was no less assiduous in the discharge of his duties towards his pupils than towards himself. They not only attended lectures, or received private lessons, but they were examined at night in what they had been taught in the morning, and every week they wrote a declamation, while they were constantly writing or reciting something in prose or in poetry. The discipline was stern, and doubtless effective. 'Free from anger,' says his biographer, 'and from other affections, whom he loved he chastened more severely, or more gently, according to the measure of the fault': His ideas of 'recreation' were very different from ours, and, perhaps, erred as much in defect as ours in excess. 'He hardly took any recreation but walking, and, even then, he was either wrapt in meditation, or occupied in teaching his pupils or in disputing, after the method of Aristotle, with his colleagues.

From what we should now call a Tutorship, Jewel passed to the Readership of Latin, and Humfrey's account of his conduct in this office is interesting as showing that it was still, as the Founder intended it to be, of the nature of a University Professorship rather than a College Lectureship. The lectures, which were partly on the Orators, partly on the Poets, were attended by members of other Colleges as well as his own, and not by juniors only but also by seniors, amongst whom were John Parkhurst, his old Merton Tutor, and Humfrey himself.

One of the most noteworthy points in the subsequent history of the College is the leaven of secret Romanism which pervaded it throughout the reigns of Edward VI. and Elizabeth, and does not seem to have been entirely worked out till the Revolution. A great quantity of sacred vessels and vestments was concealed in and outside the College throughout the reign of Edward VI., and during the early part of Elizabeth's reign, till, in 1566, the vessels, with the exception of a gold chalice and paten, still existing, seem to have been removed by the Visitor's Commissary, though the same, or other vestments, appear still to have been retained in the College down to the time of the Commonwealth. Another point which may be noticed is the almost complete sweep of members of the Foundation which was made by the Parliamentary Visitors in 1648. The President, Robert Newlyn, was, however, restored in 1660, and continued to hold the Presidency till within a few months of the Revolution of 1688, living to be over 90.

The original foundation consisted of a President, twenty Fellows, twenty Scholars, two Chaplains, two Clerks, and two Choristers, the only other members of the College recognised in the Statutes being the eight "Famuli Collegii," and a number, not exceeding six, of "filii nobilitum aut jure regni peritorum," subsequently called "gentlemen commoners." By the Statutes of 1855, the Fellowships and Scholarships were no longer, as before, confined to particular dioceses and counties, the Scholars no longer had a right of succession to the Fellowships, the clerical restrictions were considerably modified, Exhibitioners were substituted for the Choristers and Clerks, and the six Gentlemen Commoners made way for ordinary Commoners, unrestricted in number. Still further alterations were made by the Statutes of 1882, the clerical restrictions being almost entirely abolished, great elasticity being allowed with regard to the number of Fellows and Scholars, and provision being made for ultimately including no less than five University Professors in the College, two of which, those of Latin and Jurisprudence, had already been founded.

Corpus is remarkable for the number and eminence of its distinguished alumni. Amongst these may be enumerated Cardinal Pole, nominated Fellow by the Founder himself; John Jewel, Bishop of Salisbury, Richard Hooker, and John Reynolds, President in 1598, all three Devonshire Scholars, of whom Fuller says, "No one county in England bare three such men (contemporary at large) in what College soever they were bred, no College in England bred such three men, in what county soever they were born;" Thomas Jackson, President in 1630, and Dean of Peterborough, perhaps the most eminent theologian of his time; the "ever-memorable" John Hales; the antiquaries, Miles Windsor, Brian Twyne and William Fulman; Edward Pocock, the famous Oriental scholar; General Oglethorpe, the founder of Georgia; the great lawyers, Lord Stowell and Lord Tenterden; Archbishop Laurence and Bishops Burgess, Copleston and Phillpotts; William Buckland, Dean of Westminster, the father of English geologists; John Keble and Thomas Arnold. The name of the unhappy Duke of Monmouth, reputed natural son of Charles II., occurs in the Buttery Books from 1666 to 1683, but he does not appear ever to have "batted."

The charming account of Corpus, its studies, and its youthful society, contributed by Mr. Justice Coleridge in a letter to Dr. Stanley, for his "Life of Arnold," gives an attractive picture of student life at Corpus in the early years of the present century: "Arnold and I, as you know, were undergraduates of Corpus Christi, a college very small in its numbers, and humble in its buildings, but to which we and our fellow students formed an attachment never weakened in the after course of our lives. . . . We were then a small society, the members rather under the usual age and with more than the ordinary proportion of ability and scholarship; our mode of tuition was in harmony with these circumstances; not by private lectures, but in classes of such a size as excited emulation, and made us careful in the exact and neat rendering of the original, yet not so numerous as to prevent individual attention on the tutor's part, and familiar knowledge of each pupil's turn and talents. In addition to the books read in lecture, the tutor at the beginning of the term settled with each student upon some book to be read by himself in private, and prepared for the public examination at the end of term in Hall; and with this book something on paper, either an analysis of it, or remarks upon it, was expected to be produced, which insured that the book should really have been read. It has often struck me since that this whole plan, which is now I believe in common use in the University, was well devised for the tuition of young men of our age. We were not entirely set free from the leading-strings of the school; accuracy was cared for; we were accustomed to vivâ voce rendering, and vivâ voce question and answer in our lecture-room, before an audience of fellow-students, whom we sufficiently respected; at the same time, the additional reading, trusted to ourselves alone, prepared us for accurate private study, and for our final exhibition in the schools.

One result of all these circumstances was, that we lived on the most familiar terms with each other: we might be, indeed we were, somewhat boyish in manner, and in the liberties we took with each other; but our interest in literature, ancient and modern, and in all the stirring matters of that stirring time, was not boyish; we debated the classic and romantic question; we discussed poetry and history, logic and philosophy; or we fought over the Peninsular battles and the Continental campaigns with the energy or dispartants personally concerned in them. Our habits were inexpensive and temperate: one break-up party was held in the junior common room at the end of each term, in which we indulged our genius more freely, and our merriment, to say the truth, was somewhat exuberant and noisy; but the authorities wisely forbore too strict an inquiry into this."

The more remarkable features in the buildings of the College are the fine Perpendicular roof of the Hall, the very interesting old Library, and the curious dial, designed by Charles Turnbull, in 1581, which occupies the middle of the front quadrangle. The College possesses many valuable manuscripts and early printed books, and a collection of mediæval plate, perhaps unrivalled in England. Many stories have been invented for the purpose of accounting for so large a quantity of plate escaping the melting-pot during the time of Charles the First's requisitions in Oxford, but the simplest and most probable explanation is that it was redeemed by a money-payment.

T. FOWLER, D.D., President.

For a fuller account of this College, by the same writer, see The Colleges of Oxford, by A. Clark, M.A.; Methuen, London, 1891. A complete history of the College by Dr. Fowler, with lists of its members, forms vol. xxv. of the publications of the Oxford Historical Society.

XIII.—CHRIST CHURCH.

ORIGINALLY the foundation of Christ Church was due to the munificence of Cardinal Wolsey, who, recognising that the downfall of the Monastic system in England was imminent, resolved to divert the revenues of at least some of the regular clergy to the endowment of secular clergy and the advancement of learning.

In 1524 Wolsey first gained possession of St. Frideswide's Monastery granted to him by King Henry VIII. and suppressed by Pope Clement VII. ; and this Pope by a Bull dated September, 1524, and confirmed by the King 7 January, 1525, allowed Wolsey to appropriate the revenues of many more of the smaller monasteries and to confer them upon his projected foundation.

In 1525 was laid the first stone of Cardinal College, which was entitled "Collegium Thomæ Wolsey Cardinalis Eboracensis."

For this the three Western Bays of St. Frideswide's Church were pulled down as well as the West side of the Cloister, because these interfered with the plan of the Great Quadrangle ; but Wolsey left untouched the Chapter House, the Prior's House, now the lodgings of the Canon of the 11th Stall, and the Refectory.

By 1529 the Kitchen, the East and South sides and nearly all the number of those who were to constitute the earliest Foundation were settled in the College.

But upon Wolsey's attainder all he had destined for Cardinal College lapsed to the King, who in 1532 refounded it under the title of King Henry the Eighth's College ; of this also John Hygden was appointed Dean ; and he was succeeded by John Oliver.

In 1545 the King again took into his own power the College with all its possessions, and on 4 Nov., 1546, by letters patent, combined the lately created Cathedral of Oxford and the College just dissolved into one Foundation styled "Ecclesia Christi Cathedralis Oxon. ex fundatione Regis Henrici Octavi," of which the first Dean was Richard Cox. This Foundation began its corporate existence on 14 Jan., 1547.

Though the King had granted away many of the endowments intended by Wolsey for Cardinal College, he bestowed upon this his last foundation Peckwater Inn or Vine Hall together with Canterbury College in addition, so that the whole extent of the precincts on which Ædes Christi,¹ Christ Church, was established, has not changed from that day.

This Foundation, though shorn of much of the grandeur which Wolsey had designed, remained paramount in Oxford and practically unchanged for more than three centuries from 1547 to 1858. It consisted of :—

A Dean ; eight Canons ; a hundred Students, to whom one was added in 1663 ; eight Chaplains ; an Organist ; eight singing men ; eight Choristers ; various subordinate officials.

As the King died without having sanctioned any Statutes, the House was governed by the Dean and Canons, whose orders gradually crystallized into a traditional code.

With regard to the fabric between 1547 and 1858, the following additions were made to the buildings as Wolsey had left them :—

The Hall Staircase, under Dean Samuel Fell.

The North side of the Great Quadrangle and about three Bays of the West side ; a block of buildings at S. end of the Cloister facing the meadow ; the East side of the Chaplains' Quadrangle ; and Tom Tower, under Dean John Fell.

Three sides of Peckwater Quadrangle, under Dean Aldrich.

VIEW BY LOGGAN,

The Library¹, under Dean Smalridge.

The Anatomy School, now the Laboratory, under Dean Gregory. Canterbury Quadrangle and Gateway, under Deans Markham and Bagot.

Large Lecture Room by the Hall, under Dean Smith.

Since 1858 Christ Church has been in a state of Heraclitean flux, having received two Ordinances and one set of Statutes within twenty-five years. One marked result of recent legislation has been to reduce the number of those on the Foundation, e.g.—

The Canonries formerly eight are now six;

In place of a hundred and one Studentships tenable under certain conditions for life, are now thirty-four Studentships and thirty-nine scholarships tenable for periods varying from two to fifteen years;

The Chaplaincies formerly eight are now six.

Much has been done under Dean Liddell as regards the fabric in the way of demolition, of renovation, of addition. The range of Fell's Buildings, the Organist's House, the South and East sides of the Chaplains' Quadrangle, all in a state of great disrepair, have been pulled down to make room for the Meadow Buildings.

The interior of the Cathedral has been carefully restored; one of the Bays of the Nave destroyed by Wolsey has been rebuilt; moreover, the end of the South Transept has been brought again within the Cathedral after having long been converted into a Verger's house.

The North side of the Cloister also has been thrown open again after having been for a century used as a Muniment Room.

The Chapter House has been entirely cleared of the partitions and raised floor which disfigured it, so that its pristine graceful proportions can now be admired.

Of the houses belonging to the two suppressed Canonries portions of each have been converted into College Rooms, and a new West entrance to the Cathedral has been made through one of them formerly the lodgings of the Regius Professor of Divinity.

The splendid peal of ten bells in D \flat has been moved from the Cathedral Tower, for which they were far too heavy, to Wolsey's Campanile over the Hall Staircase, which has been raised more than thirty feet.

It would take up too much space merely to enumerate the distinguished men, who as Undergraduate members of the House owed not a little to their training herein, and by their subsequent career shed lustre upon Christ Church; while to write their lives would in several instances be to transcribe pages of England's history.

The Arms now borne by Christ Church are those of Cardinal Wolsey: Sable, on a cross engrailed argent, a lion passant gules between four leopards' faces azure; on a chief or, a rose of the third, seeded of the fifth, and barbed vert, between two Cornish choughs proper.

The Badge is a Cardinal's Hat with five tassels.

The Motto, belonging to Wolsey, is DOMINVS MIHI ADIVTOR; this was to be seen in the East Window of the Choir, which existed during the whole of the last and down to the middle of the present century.

XIV.—TRINITY COLLEGE.

URSORY inspection of the small middle quadrangle of Trinity College (legally designated "The College of the Holy and Undivided Trinity in the University of Oxford of the Foundation of Sir Thomas Pope, Knight") will show the visitor that one side at least of the square is of earlier date than the middle of the 16th century. In fact the eastern range, together with the lower parts of the buildings adjoining the hall, originally formed part of a house for the accommodation of monks and novices from Durham Abbey sent to study at Oxford in accordance with the regulations of the Constitutions of Pope Benedict XII., which provided that all Benedictine Convents should maintain at some 'studium generale' at least five per cent. of their members. The Durham monks had acquired a site in the suburbs (viz., the present precincts of Trinity except about half the front quadrangle, together with the back quadrangle and about half the garden of St. John's), in the time of Prior Hugh de Darlington, and the next Prior, Richard de Hoton (see 'Dict. Nat. Biogr.'), an energetic and quarrelsome man, commenced the buildings, the Convent presumably finding the money. The establishment was worked as a cell of Durham, though Bishop Richard de Bury nearly succeeded in obtaining for it a separate endowment, his pupil Edward III. being at one time willing to appropriate to the purpose the rich rectory of Symondburne as a thank-offering for his victory at Halidon Hill. But the Bishop was unsuccessful, and could only leave the College the famous collection of books, to amass which he seems to have considerably impoverished himself. Some at least of these books were brought to Oxford, and eventually deposited in a handsome room which was built (or rebuilt) in 1417; at the Reformation the Aungerville Library and the additions to it were destroyed or dispersed, but the room was re-fitted in 1618, and contains a collection commenced by Sir Thomas Pope and his friends, augmented and endowed by the Rev. Richard Rands, and almost doubled by the bequest of the library of President Ingram, who died in 1850. There is also some ancient glass, repaired in 1774 and 1878, that in the south window dating from 1436. The old bursary and the buttery with its arched entrances are the oldest remains of Durham College.

The separate endowment of the Oxford house was bequeathed by the eminent statesman and architect, Bishop Thomas Hatfield, who died in 1381. His acting executor, a monk connected with Lord Mayor William Walworth, purchased and obtained the appropriation of 4 rectories in York and Lincoln dioceses, and the Convent bound themselves to provide for any depreciation in the income. The new foundation of a warden and seven fellows (monks) and eight boys or scholars (secular students in grammar and philosophy) was placed in possession of its revenues in 1389, and the bursarial rolls, which were forwarded to Durham and of which a large boxfull is still preserved there, give many details of its history. A chapel was erected in 1408-10, an outer gate in 1406, the Library in 1417, and the rest of the east range, till recently the President's lodgings, about the same time. A 'perloquitorium' is mentioned in 1428; and the whole style of the buildings, allowances, etc., shows liberality. The revenues however fluctuated and finally sank, in spite of an augmentation by the Convent. The position of the College was respectable, though not brilliant, and the wardenship was frequently a stepping-stone to the Priorate of the Abbey itself.

In 1540 Durham College was included in the surrender of the Abbey by Prior Hugh Whitehead, who became Dean; but it seems that the last warden, George Clyffe, received and administered a year's revenue in 1541-2. The Survey mentions a single quadrangle, with lodge, entry, chapel, hall, and offices, warden's lodgings, rooms, and a grove containing over 3000 trees, the northern half of which having been let to St. Bernard College (Cisterians) at a nominal rent, was included in a grant of the precincts of that house.

The buildings having remained empty sufficiently long to fall into considerable disrepair, were sold by Dr. George Owen, the grantee, to Sir Thomas Pope, who was then looking for a site on which to found, out of the immense wealth he had acquired as Treasurer of the Court of Augmentations, an institution for the encouragement of religion and learning. Sir Thomas, who was an Oxfordshire man, had received a good education at Banbury and Eton, had risen at the bar and as a servant of the Crown, and was intimate with Sir Thomas More and others of the moderate and literary party among the reformers. He was childless, and able to provide munificently for his wife and her nephews, as well as his own brothers and sisters; and before his death, which occurred in 1559, he had amply endowed his College, the first of the Post-Reformation Foundations, with a selection from his landed property in Oxfordshire and Essex. His widow, afterwards Lady Paulet, acted as patroness till her death in 1593, and the friendly relations between the College and the Pope and Blount families were continued to the Norths, who now represent the founder, and have usually received their education at his College.

TRINITY COLLEGE (Letters patent dated March 1, 1555, Statutes 1556, with postscript 1557, first computus 1556) was designed for a president and 12 fellows in priests orders, with 8 scholars afterwards increased to 12. From the Fellows are to be chosen annually a vice-president, a dean, two bursars, four chaplains, and two readers, one in logic or philosophy, the other in rhetoric or grammar. The Scholars are to study in the usual arts course, and succeed, if possible, to the fellowships, regard being held both in their election and in their promotion to the counties to which they belong, those in which College property is situated having a preference. The statutes also provide salaries for four regular servants, a barber and a laundress, and a small sum for the services of an organist. The regulations as to chapel services, discipline, scrutines, allowances, punishments, and the conduct or studies of the Scholars, are similar to those of other 16th century foundations. The reception of a few commoners is permitted. The rectory of Garsington, which had been bestowed on the founder by Queen Mary, is annexed to the office of President. The general tenour of the statutes is reactionary, but great care is shown that there should be nothing which would necessarily prove fatal to the existence of this College, if the Reformation movement went forward again. In fact, under Elizabeth, the College was twice visited (in 1560 and 1570), the first president and several fellows deprived, and chapel plate and vestments destroyed, without any protest on the part of the founder's representative, or actual alteration of his statutes.

The first President was Dr. Thomas Slythurst, who had received a canonry of Windsor and some other Court patronage from Queen Mary. Of the original fellows the most able was a Cambridge man, Arthur Yeldard, and he, on the removal of Slythurst, was elected President, and held office till his death in 1599. Nothing of any importance occurred during his time, but the College gradually won a place among the older and richer foundations, and was frequented by some of the best families of the Midland Counties. It also received some additional benefactions about this time, but the corporate revenues were not large, as the estates had been let on long lease by the founder. The third president, Ralph Kettell, was a man of some character and ability, and in his later years, at least, famous for his eccentricities (see 'Dict. of Nat. Biography'). He commenced, though rather tentatively, the building operations which by the end of the century had almost entirely transformed the appearance of the College. In particular, he added to the north and east ranges an upper story (inserted in the high pitched roof of the first floor), with the picturesque dormer windows which still remain unaltered; in 1620 he rebuilt the hall from its foundations, which he had impaired by attempting to excavate cellars beneath them; and he erected "Kettell Hall" in Broad Street as an annexe to the College, on ground held from Oriel College on a long lease which expired in the present century. During Kettell's presidentship several men of eminence were educated at the College, among whom were William Chillingworth, Archbishop Sheldon, Bishop Skinner of Oxford, the parliamentary generals Ludlow and Ireton, and Sir John Denham the poet.

Under the fourth President, Hannibal Potter, Trinity bore its share of the misfortunes caused by the civil wars. The rents were unpaid, and the educational work suspended. In 1648 several members of the College were ejected by the Parliamentary visitors, one of whom, Dr. Robert Harris, was made president. Many of the more able fellows had accepted the commissioners with more or less sincerity, and after this the work of the College seems to have gone on without much friction under them. The sixth President, William Hawes, was selected from these, and in 1659, when he was dying Seth Ward, a Cambridge man who had taken refuge in Oxford and was well known for his scientific attainments, was hastily elected to avoid an appointment by the new Protector. Shortly afterwards the Restoration brought with it the re-instatement of Potter, who survived for four years.

The eighth President, Ralph Bathurst, M.D., had long been the principal person in the College, and was already well known as a scientific man as well as a fair scholar. He was an able and liberal administrator, and by the works in his time practically remodelled the College. New rooms were built in the garden in 1665, and in 1682 connected with the old quadrangle, the north side of which was afterwards (1728) rebuilt in the same style. Bathurst also erected a new kitchen and a large annexe to the President's lodgings (since destroyed), and re-arranged the rooms over the hall, but his principal and most munificent work was the present Chapel (1691-4) which cost over £3000. He was also well known and trusted as a disciplinarian, and his educational arrangements, while adhering in form to the statutory system, were decidedly in advance of his time. They included lectures, disputations, and private tutorial instruction in Logic and Physics; "every afternoon there was an exposition in the Hall on the best Greek and Latin authors, where the young Scholars were made to construe and give the sense in a manly way, and the Lecturer explained the text grammatically and historically"; there were also themes and composition in prose and verse, and courses in Experimental Philosophy and Chemistry as well as in Mathematics, and the library was well used. Bathurst's most eminent pupil was the future Lord Chancellor, Somers; and to his social influence may be attributed the large number of commoners of good family, among whom, in the next century, were Stanhope, the elder Pitt, and Lord North.

Bathurst's successors, Doctors Sykes (1704), Dobson (1705), Huddesford (1731), Chapman (1776), and Lee (1808) were not in any way remarkable, and the most distinguished member of the foundation in the 18th century was Thomas Warton, the Professor of History and Poetry, and Poet Laureate, who wrote widely on literary and antiquarian subjects, as well as on the history of his College. For the rest the annals of the College are uneventful; the old Durham gateway was destroyed in 1733, the lime tree walk planted in 1713, and the gardens laid out as at present early in the 19th century. About the same time (1812) the attics of the garden quadrangle were converted into a regular second floor; and some land acquired which extended the frontage towards Broad Street.

Dr. James Ingram (1824-1850) was a man of considerable learning, and a capable, though eccentric ruler, and the reputation of the College as a place of education created by him and some of the tutors such as Kett and Short, has been ably maintained by his four successors. At the beginning of the century (about 1815) the scholarships were opened to competition, and the experiment was soon rewarded by the appearance of such men as Cardinal Newman, Lord Selborne, and many others who made a Trinity scholarship one of the most coveted positions in the University. The Fellowships were thrown open about 1843. Trinity had some connexion with the Oxford Movement, and still more with the foundation of a school of Oxford historians under Professors Stubbs and Freeman.

The new statutes of 1881 made the usual alterations in the tenure of fellowships, and provided for a slight increase in the number of scholars and exhibitioners. About the same time a considerable rise in the number of commoners made it necessary to build more rooms; accordingly between 1883 and 1887 the rooms in the Broad Street quadrangle were erected, and others provided in the old cottages and the old president's lodgings, a new house being built near the Chapel; the result has been a great improvement in the appearance of the buildings.

TRINITY COLLEGE, HARTFORD, CONNECTICUT.

From Ingram's Memorials

WHITE HALL, now demolished.—From an engraving by Skelton.

XV.—ST. JOHN BAPTIST COLLEGE.

THE College of St. John Baptist occupies the site and some of the buildings of a Bernardine House founded by Archbishop Chichele in 1437, for the Cistercian scholars studying at Oxford. By Letters Patent of Henry VI. the Archbishop received leave to "erect a College to the honour of the most glorious Virgin Mary and St. Bernard, in the street commonly called North Gate Street, in the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, without the North Gate." The buildings consisted only of a single block facing westwards, with one wing behind. The hall was built about 1502, and the chapel consecrated in 1530. All of these remain in use. The hall was enlarged and ceiled in the seventeenth century. The chapel, after being decorated in the Laudian period, was unhappily restored in the earliest period of the Gothic revival of the present century. It has, however, recently been improved under the skilful hand of Mr. C. E. Kempe. The monks had also a garden, leased at first part from University College and part from Durham College. This garden, with later additions, is one of the most beautiful features of the Oxford of to-day.

At the dissolution in 1539, the lands, buildings, and revenues of St. Bernard's College were given by Henry VIII. to his newly-founded College and Cathedral of Christ Church, in whose possession they remained unused some sixteen years. In 1555, the deserted buildings were restored to use, and the College re-founded under Letters Patent of Philip and Mary granted at the request of a rich and munificent London trader, Sir Thomas White, who had been Sheriff of London in 1547, and Lord Mayor in the year of Sir Thomas Wyatt's rebellion.

The College thus founded in 1555, was to be set apart for the study of the sciences of Sacred Theology, Philosophy, and good Arts, it was dedicated to the praise and honour of God, of the Blessed Virgin Mary His Mother, and St. John Baptist; and the Society was to consist of a President and thirty graduate or non-graduate scholars. In 1557, both the scope and numbers of the original foundation were enlarged; Theology, Philosophy, Civil and Canon Law were now declared to be the subjects of study, and the number of Fellows and scholars was raised to fifty, of whom six were to be Founder's kin, two from Coventry, Bristol, and Reading schools, one from Tunbridge, and the rest from the Merchant Taylors' school in London.

During the present century its numbers have greatly increased and all its fellowships have been thrown open, but its connection with the schools designated by the Founder still remains.

During its earlier years Sir Thomas White watched over the institution which he had founded. The statutes which he gave were substantially those of New College, and this return to the scheme of William of Wykeham, which had been so largely adopted at Cambridge, shows that the alterations made by the founders of Magdalen, Corpus Christi, and Trinity, were not felt to be improvements. He nominated the first President, his own kinsman John James as Vice-President for life, and the earlier Fellows. He died on Feb. 11th, 1566, and was buried with solemn ceremonial in the College chapel, where his coffin was found intact when that of Laud was laid beside it nearly a century later. A funeral oration was preached by one of the most brilliant of the junior Fellows, Edmund Campion, soon to win wider notoriety, and eventually to die a shameful death.

The most distinguished President of the sixteenth century was Toby Matthew, who rose to be Archbishop of York, a man of learning and wit and a skilful administrator. So long as the founder had lived, his tact had smoothed the difficulties of the transition from the Marian to the Elizabethan rule. Two at least of the earlier Presidents were deprived for asserting the Pope's supremacy, yet the change was managed without disturbance. But when the wise counsels of the founder could no longer be heard, and when the Papal Court had declared itself the bitter foe of Elizabeth, Fellow after Fellow retired, or was deprived, and joined the Roman party. For this cause no less than six members of the foundation are recorded within a few years to have been imprisoned. But before long the University was greatly influenced by Calvinist doctrines. It was from St. John's that the first opposition to the prevalent opinions came, and it was thus that William Laud first became famous.

His work belongs to the history of England. 'He, with Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth, forms the triad of persons who have had the largest share in giving to the momentous changes of the sixteenth century so much of their form as is strictly and specifically British.' Again, to quote Mr. Gladstone, 'He was the patron not only of the saintly and heroic Bedell, but on the one hand of Chillingworth and Hales, on the other of Usher, Hall, and Davenant, of names sharply severed in opinion but unitedly known in the history of ability and of learning. It is again directly to the present purpose to compare the Calvinistic Oxford, to which Laud came as a youth, with the Anglican Oxford which he quitted to pass out into the government of affairs. The change in this place almost equals what was said of Augustus, that he found Rome brick and left it marble.' He was President from 1611 to 1621; and his benefactions to the College did not cease even with his life.

The new quadrangle, which was begun in July, 1631, when the King gave two hundred tons of wood from the royal forests of Stow and Shotover to aid in the building, was a magnificent expression of the donor's generosity and love for the College. It was completed in 1636, and Laud, now Archbishop of Canterbury, having assigned by special direction the new rooms to the library, to the President, and for the use of commoners, made elaborate preparations to receive the King and Queen when they "invited themselves" to him. They brought with them the King's nephews, the Elector Palatine and Prince Rupert, who were entered on the books of St. John's. Laud's College and his new library were the centre of the entertainments that marked their stay in Oxford.

By this time Laud had not only given to his own College a notable position in the University, but had reformed and legislated for the University itself. The statutes had long been in confusion. Convocation in any case of difficulty passed new rules which frequently conflicted with the old statutes, and the government of the undergraduates seems to have been very lax. The University submitted its laws to the Chancellor, who, with the aid of a learned lawyer of Merton College, revised and codified them. How he desired that the students should be ruled may be seen by his careful direction to the heads of Colleges, that "the youths should conform themselves to the public discipline of the University. . . . And particularly see that none, youth or other, be suffered to go in boots or spurs, or to wear their hair undecently long, or with a lock in the present fashion, or with slashed doublets, or in any light or garish colours; and that noblemen's sons may conform in everything, as others do, during the time of their abode there, which will teach them to know the difference of places and order betimes; and when they grow up to be men it will make them look back upon that place with honour to it and reputation to you." So successful was he in impressing the spirit of discipline and self-restraint, that Sir John Coke was able to congratulate the University in 1636 that "scholars are no more found in taverns, nor seen loitering in the streets or other places of idleness or ill-example, but all contain themselves within the walls of their Colleges, and in the schools or public libraries, wherein I confess you have at length gotten the start, and by your virtue and merit have made this University, which before had no paragon in any foreign country, now to go beyond itself and give a glorious example to others not to go behind."

By his example of conscientious perseverance, by his devotion to learning, and by his munificent building and endowment, Laud had brought both his College and the University to a high standard of culture and research. These were indeed the halcyon days of St. John's, when Laud, its "second founder," was Chancellor of the University and Primate of all England; Juxon, his pious and sagacious successor as President, was Bishop of London and Lord Treasurer; and Dr. Richard Baylie governed the College, whose annalist says that never was there more diligent Scholar, more learned Fellow, or more prudent Head. But the University soon fell on evil days; discipline was dissolved, teaching and learning were alike suspended, and the streets rang with the summons to arms. The city bore for several years the aspect at once of a camp and of an exiled Court. In these troubles St. John's had its full share. Scholars joined the King's troops, Fellows were driven from their country livings, the College gave up its treasures to the Royal cause. (See English Historical Review, October, 1892.)

Juxon, "that good man," as Charles I. called him, had worthy successors. After Baylie, who had married Laud's niece, and was restored in 1660, died, Peter Mews, a former fellow of the College, who had led an adventurous life during the Rebellion as a Royalist agent in Scotland and Flanders, was nominated by the King and elected by the College. He ruled well and wisely, and lived as Bishop of Bath and Wells, and later of Winchester, to the beginning of the eighteenth century.

The most interesting period of the College history was during the Reigns of the Stuarts. The same spirit of devotion to the Church and loyalty to the throne which had animated Laud and Juxon still breathed in their successors. Tobias Rustat, esquire, yeoman of the Robes to Charles II., and under House-keeper of Hampton Court, left a large sum to endow loyal lectures—two on “the day of the horrid and most execrable murder of that most glorious Prince and Martyr;” one to be read by the Dean of Divinity, and the other by “some one of the most ingenious Scholars or Fellows whom the President shall appoint,” setting forth the “barbarous cruelty of that unparalleled parricide;” one by the Dean of Law on October 23rd, “which was the day wherein Rebellion did appear solemnly armed against Majesty:” and a fourth on the 29th of May, “setting forth the glory and happiness of that day,” which saw the birth of Charles II. and his “triumphant return.” There is in the College library a curious portrait of Charles I., over which, in a minute hand, several Psalms are written. Tradition has it that when the “merry monarch” visited Oxford he asked for this eccentric piece of work, and that when on leaving, in recognition of his loyal welcome, he offered to give the Fellows anything that they should ask, they declared that no gift could be so precious as the restoration to them of the portrait of his father. The story, true or not, could only be told of a College which was famous as the home of devoted loyalty to the Stuarts. It was Dr. Peter Mews who lent his carriage horses to draw the Royal canon to Sedgemoor.

Almost within living memory the Fellows of St. John's in their Common Room, “a large handsome room, the scene of a great deal of learning and a great many puns,” toasted the king “over the water.” Up till the middle of the present century, indeed, it was a College of survivals. The old loyal lectures were read, the old “gaudies” held, the old rules maintained.

During the period of the Tractarian movement the College played no unimportant part. Its President, Dr. Philip Wynter, was Vice-Chancellor during the most critical years. One of its tutors, the Rev. H. B. Wilson (Bampton Lecturer, 1851) was prominent in controversy, and another Fellow, the Rev. H. A. Woodgate, was “a centre of influence in Oxford and in the country” (Dean Church, Oxford Movement, p. 293). Even within recent years the College has been accused (by an observer who loved bitterness and epigram better than enquiry) of being ‘corroded with ecclesiasticism.’ It is a charge at which Dean Mansel, the most famous of its modern alumni, would have smiled.

Much has undergone change at the hands of Time and of Parliamentary Commissions; but there still lingers one feature of the old life of the University which elsewhere has passed away. St. John's alone of all the Colleges has (1893) no married Fellow; thus here, as it can scarcely be elsewhere, the College life is most closely centered within the College walls.

XVI.—JESUS COLLEGE.

HENRY VIII. has long been reputed to be the Founder of Christ Church. Of late some doubt has seemed to be thrown on the fact by the marked manner in which the King's name has been left out of the Bidding Prayer by Christ Church preachers before the University. But in the same measure as Elizabeth founded Jesus College, Henry founded Christ Church. Hugo Price was her Wolsey. Activity in founding Colleges seems to have culminated in the effort of the great Cardinal. During the reign of Mary a revival of energy was shown in the rising of Trinity and St. John's, but the tale of Colleges was nearly complete, and only one new foundation has arisen since the close of the sixteenth century. But just before its close the glorious reign of Elizabeth was signalized by the founding of many educational institutions throughout the country, and in Oxford by the appearance of Jesus College. The Tudors were proud of their Welsh origin, and Welshmen were not slow to appeal to their pride for tangible benefits to the Principality. It was, doubtless, with a wish to establish a home for his countrymen in Oxford that Hugo Price or Ap Rice, Doctor of Laws, Treasurer of St David's, and Fellow of All Souls' petitioned Queen Elizabeth to grant the site of White Hall for the building of a new College. This Hall was situated on the north side of Cheyne Lane (now called Market Street), a short distance from the corner where it enters the Turl. It had absorbed into itself several smaller Halls which stood around it. Whether it was reserved entirely for Welsh students is a point which cannot be decided, but there is reason to think that it was much frequented by them. There is, however, no doubt that the new College which superseded it was intended almost entirely for the benefit of Wales. The first Letters Patent were granted on the 27th of June, 1571. They provide for the Constitution of a College to consist of a Principal, eight Fellows and eight Scholars.

The Principal nominated in the Letters Patent was David Lewes, Doctor of Laws; among the Scholars may be noticed Lancelot Andrews, Bishop successively of Chichester, Ely, and Winchester. The Founder died about three years after these Letters were issued, and was buried in the Priory Church at Brecon. It is therefore very doubtful whether he saw any of the new buildings of the infant College. It was, probably, the policy of the builders to make use of the existing buildings of White Hall, which stood on the southern side of what is now the outer quadrangle. The next portion added was part of the east front; until 1618 there was probably no addition made to the fabric of the College. Second Letters Patent were issued by Queen Elizabeth on the 7th day of July, 1589, but there is no great growth to be reported until the reign of King James I., who in the fiftieth year of the College issued the third Letters Patent dated June 1st, 1621. In these the King confirms the establishment of the College and doubles the number of Fellows and Scholars. It is remarkable that in none of these documents is there any mention of Wales, or of advantages to be derived from parentage or place of birth. Among the original foundationers, and for some years after the foundation, names occur among Fellows and Scholars of persons who manifestly were not Welshmen. But every Principal, even in the time of the Commonwealth, was of Welsh birth. The Principal was in those despotic days the source of all patronage, and after the lapse of a few years from the foundation we can see from the lists of names on the College books how exclusively he exercised his privilege. In the days of Sir Leoline Jenkins, Fellowships and Scholarships were assigned to natives of special parts of Wales, but the College maintained its Welsh connection for about a century without any such restrictions. Dr. Francis Mansell, who was principal at the time, resigned in favour of Sir Eubule Thelwall, who is mentioned in the charter. The latter was a man of ample means and greatly increased the buildings of the College, completing the kitchen, buttery and hall begun by Griffith Powell one of his predecessors, and adding a house for the Principal and the Chapel, thus finishing the outer quadrangle. On his death Dr. Francis Mansell was again elected, and was rapidly adding to the buildings of the College, by constructing an inner quadrangle, when a stop was put to all extension by the troubles of the Civil War. He was obliged to relinquish his post and retired for safety into Wales.

During his enforced absence two Principals ruled the College—Michael Roberts and Francis Howell, but there is no extension of buildings or endowments to be recorded, and the former of these two Principals is accused of impoverishing the College by embezzling its scanty funds. Much money and all the silver plate was sacrificed in a vain attempt to save the Royal cause.

Dr. Mausell was restored to the Headship in 1660, but owing to "the decayes of Age, especially dimness of Sight," he resolved to resign once more. The choice of the College fell upon Leoline Jenkins, who may be regarded as the second founder of the College. He was born in 1625 in the county of Glamorgan, and was educated at Cowbridge School, which he afterwards endowed. He entered Jesus College in 1641, and when the Restoration took place, returned to residence and (as stated above) was elected Principal. He held the post for thirteen years and busied himself in adding to the buildings of the College, completing the Library, and most of the western side of the inner quadrangle. He also took much part in the business of the University, being of singular use to it from his skill in French and other modern languages. He found the University too narrow a field for his great talents and resigned his Principalship in 1673. He then devoted himself to the public service, and rose to be Judge of the High Court of Admiralty and Prerogative Court of Canterbury, Ambassador and Plenipotentiary for the General Peace at Cologne and Nimeguen, and Secretary of State to King Charles II. He was made a Knight and became Burgess for his own University.

But amid the successes and distinctions of his later life he did not forget the College of which he had been Head, and at his death in 1685 he bequeathed to it almost the whole of his property. His body was conveyed to Oxford, and after a public funeral, was interred in the College Chapel. A marble slab covers his grave and bears a long Latin inscription supposed to have been written by his old friend Dr. Fell, Lord Bishop of Oxford and Dean of Christ Church. His portrait, painted at Nimeguen, hangs in the College Hall.

During the period ending with the close of the seventeenth century many distinguished names appear on the books. Bishop Andrews has already been mentioned, and we find that in 1644 James Usher, Archbishop of Armagh, was resident in and a member of the College. Among laymen we find James Howell (1013), writer of the Familiar Letters, a book which Thackeray is said always to have had by him. Henry Vaughan, "The Silurist" (1638), a religious poet of rare merit; his brother, Thomas Vaughan; Eugenius Philalethes, an eminent writer, philosopher and chemist; Sir William Williams (1688), a very eminent lawyer, Speaker of the House of Commons, Solicitor and Attorney General. Among Welsh literati we find Rees Prichard (1602), the author of one of the best known books in Wales—Cantyll y Cymru; Dr. John Davies, a Welsh scholar and grammarian; Edward Llwyd (1682), a celebrated antiquary and keeper of the Ashmolean Museum; David Powell, a learned divine; John Wynne, Principal of the College, who afterwards became Bishop successively of St. Asaph and of Bath and Wells. It would be tedious to go through the list of distinguished men who adorned the College during the first hundred and thirty years of its existence.

The eighteenth century in Jesus College, as in others, presents a great contrast in interest. At its commencement (1713) the buildings were completed by the addition of the staircase at the north-west corner of the inner quadrangle. Some valuable benefactions were received, the most important of which was the Meyricke Fund, left in trust to the College by the Rev. Edmund Meyricke, who, like the original founder of the College, was treasurer of the cathedral church of St. David's. This Fund has supplied Exhibitions and, since 1882, Scholarships confined to natives of Wales. Among the distinguished men of this period may be mentioned Thomas Charles B.A. (1779), founder of the sect of Calvinistic Methodists; David Richards (Dafydd Ionawr), an eminent Welsh poet; Goronwy Owen, one of the great names in Welsh literature; James Bandinel, the first Bampton Lecturer. Very different from these was Richard Nash, best known as Beau Nash, for fifty years Master of the Ceremonies and leader of fashion in Bath.

In the nineteenth century no addition has been made to the buildings of the College, but the east front has been altered in character by the building of a gate-way tower and refacing of the exterior wall. This was done in 1856 from the designs of Messrs. Buckler, of Oxford. The effect is good, though many antiquarians regret the disappearance of the old Jacobean gateway, which was itself an improvement on the original plain entrance to the College. The interior of the Chapel was restored in 1864, and though the new work is generally in good taste, it is not in harmony with the fine old screen, and some features of the original character of the building have been lost or obscured. The Library contains a number of volumes of more interest to the antiquarian than to the modern student, but it is well supplied with the best works on Celtic languages and antiquities. A valuable collection of manuscripts has been removed to the Bodleian Library. The best known of these is the Llyfr Coch, the famous Red Book of Hergest, containing a collection of Welsh legends and poetry which is gradually being edited by Professor Rhys and Mr. Evans. Among the pictures of the College may be mentioned one of Queen Elizabeth, by Zuccherò, of great artistic merit, a picture of Hugo Price, said to be by Holbein, a Vandyke of Charles I., a Lely of Charles II., and the portrait of Sir Leoline Jenkins.

In the latter part of this century two Commissions (1857 and 1882) have reviewed and remodelled the constitution of the College. Half the Fellowships have been thrown open by the one, half the Scholarships by the other; and some old privileges and restrictions have been swept away. Still much remains, and a real connection (which is unknown elsewhere in Oxford), exists between the College and the district which the Founder meant to benefit. It is to be hoped that the futility of reducing all educational institutions to the same level and pattern of uniformity is at last apparent, and that the College will, for the future, be left free to continue the duties which, in the past, have been successfully performed.

Vice-Principal of Jesus College.

STONE PATERAS FROM DIVINITY SCHOOL.—Pugin.

XVII.—WADHAM COLLEGE.

ATING from the reign of James I. Wadham College occupies an interesting position in the history of the University, as having been the last College founded until quite recent times, for both Pembroke and Worcester were but expansions of older foundations, indeed it may be said to share with Jesus College the honour of belonging to the days of Elizabeth, as its founder and foundress were well advanced in years at the time when they carried out their long meditated plans, and both in the spirit which animates its statutes and in the architecture of its fabric, Wadham College belongs rather to the sixteenth than to the seventeenth century.

The founder of the College, Nicholas Wadham, of Merifield, in the county of Somerset, was the last male representative of one of the oldest and wealthiest of the untitled families of the West of England. He married Dorothy, daughter of Sir William Petre, the well-known benefactor of Exeter College, but having no children he resolved to devote his great wealth to some pious use. All his patrimonial estates went to his three sisters who had married into some of the chief families of the West of England; but the savings of his long life (he was nearly 80 when he died in 1609) were devoted to the College which bears his name. The work was actually carried out by his wife; but he had left full instructions as to his wishes, some of which were unusual. He desired that the Warden, as well as the Fellows, should be unmarried; and also that each of them should be "left free to profess what he listed, as it should please God to direct him;" he did not wish them to "live thro' all their time like idle drones, but put themselves into the world, whereby others may grow up under them." He also arranged that the College should be called after his own name, and that the Bishop of Bath and Wells should be perpetual Visitor.

The foundation stone was laid with great ceremony on July 31st, 1610, and two years later the foundress, having sometime previously obtained a Charter from James I., put forth her statutes (August 16th 1612). There were to be fifteen Fellows and fifteen scholars, the former being elected from among the latter; of these three scholars were to be from Somerset, and three from Essex, while three Fellowships and three scholarships were restricted to "Founder's kin." These were originally intended for the children and descendants of the sisters above-mentioned, but in course of time it became frequent to trace kinship with the founder through collateral branches of the Wadham family.

Owing to the extent of the original design and the excellence of the building material employed, Wadham has the unique honour among the Colleges of Oxford of having remained practically unaltered since it left its foundress' hands. Of the various parts of the building the hall and the chapel are the most remarkable; the latter, in the shape of its ante-chapel, is a combination of the short nave found at New College and of transepts such as are found at Merton; while, in the tracery of the windows of its choir, it furnishes a continual puzzle to architectural theorists; for though undoubtedly every stone of it was built at the beginning of the seventeenth century, and though the woodwork is pure Jacobean, the windows, both in their tracery and in their mouldings, belong to a period one hundred and fifty years earlier. Tradition ascribes the work to an architect named Holt, who was certainly employed in Oxford at the time in building the New Schools, and it is difficult not to believe that the quad at Wadham and the Fellows' quad at Merton were designed by the same man; the resemblance between them seems too close to be accidental; but Mr. T. G. Jackson, A.R.A., the greatest living authority on Jacobean architecture, and himself a fellow of Wadham, believes that the College buildings cannot be attributed to any one man, but are rather the work of the "craftsman," and not of the professional architect. To his forthcoming book on Wadham, all interested in the development of Jacobean architecture must be referred. The cost of the whole building was £11,360.

The first thirty years of the history of the College are mainly famous for the presence there of Admiral Blake, who graduated in Feb., 1617-18; his portrait still adorns the College Hall.

The Civil War affected Wadham as it did the rest of the University. Its plate disappeared . . . only the Communion Plate ("donum fundatricis") being spared; its students were largely displaced to make room for the King's supporters, among whom the Attorney General, Sir Edward Herbert, seems to have made Wadham a kind of family residence. After the final defeat of the King, the Warden, Pytt, and the great majority of the Foundation were deprived by the Parliamentary Commissioners. But it may be fairly said that the changes made did far more good than harm to the College. The man appointed to the vacant Wardenship, was the famous John Wilkins, divine, philosopher, and mathematician, who enjoyed the almost unique honour of being promoted by the Parliament, by Richard Cromwell, and by Charles II., and to whom the College owes the honour of being the cradle of the Royal Society. Warden Wilkins had, for two hundred years, the distinction of being the only married Warden of Wadham. His wife was a sister of the Lord Protector, with whom he had great influence, which he used for the benefit of the University as a whole, and of individual Royalists. Among the most famous of his pupils were Sir Christopher Wren, who, on his election to be Fellow of All Souls, presented the College with the clock which it still uses; and Bishop Sprat, the historian of the Royal Society, who has had the misfortune to have his portrait sketched by Macaulay in his account of James II.'s reign.

Wilkins and three of his four successors all became Bishops; of these the most famous was Ironside, who, as Vice-Chancellor in 1688, ventured to oppose the king in his arbitrary proceedings against Magdalen. The fall of James saved Ironside, who was made Bishop of Bristol (and afterwards of Hereford) by William III., and was succeeded by Warden Dunster, the object of Thomas Hearne's hatred and contempt. He accuses him of being "one of the violentest Whigs and most rascally Low Churchmen" of the time, and of various other defects, physical and moral, which may perhaps be conjectured to be in Hearne's mind convertible terms with the above.

Wadham as a whole during this period was strongly Whig and Low Church; not improbably this was due to its close connection with the West country, where the suppression of Monmouth's rebellion had taught men to hate the Stuarts; but whatever the reason, the fact is undoubted. Probably there is no other College hall in England which boasts of portraits both of the "glorious deliverer" and of George I.

The history of Oxford during the 18th century is neither glorious nor eventful; and Wadham was no exception to the rule, but it was one of the first Colleges to feel the revival which began with the last quarter of the century.

In Warden Wills, who was appointed in 1783, the College found its most liberal benefactor since the death of the foundress. It was in his time that the present beautiful garden was laid out on the site of the old formal walks with a mound in the centre, which appear in the prints of the last century. It has been conjectured with some probability that "Capability" Brown had a hand in the laying out of the garden as it now is. Whoever was the gardener, it may be confidently asserted that a finer result was never produced in so small a space.

Of the history of the College during this century there is not space to say much. Under Warden Symons it became recognised as the stronghold of Evangelicalism in the University; so much was this the case that, on his nomination to the Vice-Chancellorship in 1844, he was opposed by the Tractarian party; but this unprecedented step met with no success, as the Chancellor's nomination was confirmed by 883 votes to 183. It was during his tenure of the Vice-Chancellorship (1844-8) that proceedings were taken against Mr. Ward, and against Tract No. XC. But if on the one hand the College produced leading lights of the Evangelical school, like Mr. Fox and Mr. Vores, it also lays claim to Dr. Church, the late Dean of St. Paul's, and Father Mackonochie.

The prosperity of the College culminated about the middle of the century, when Dr. Congreve was one of the leading tutors in Oxford, and when among his pupils almost at the same time were Dr. Johnson, the Bishop of Calcutta, the present Warden, Frederick Harrison, the late Dr. Shirley, one of the founders of the school of History, which is among modern Oxford's chief glories, Dr. Codrington, the scholar and missionary, the late T. C. Baring, the munificent benefactor of Hertford College, and Professor Beesly. Nor was athletic distinction wanting; in 1849 the College Boat Club "swept the board" at Henley, and twice during six years the Wadham boat was head of the river. Here it is best to end the story: with the new statutes imposed in 1855 by the authority of Parliament, the history of the old Oxford ends, and that of the modern one begins. Wadham enters on the new era with noble traditions, and with buildings and gardens which have been felt to be an inspiration of beauty by other than her own sons.

The greater part of the above notice is taken from my chapter on Wadham College in A. Clark's The Colleges of Oxford (Messrs. Methuen & Co.), to which I must refer all who wish for further particulars.

PROSCHOLIUM TO THE DIVINITY SCHOOL.—From Ingram.

XVIII.—PEMBROKE COLLEGE.

Formerly Broadgates Hall.

DESCENT FROM AN OLD HALL.—This College is a post-Reformation foundation, having been constituted as a Society in 1624. But it carried on the life of “the most ancient” and one of the most considerable of the Halls, and has therefore had a continuous existence of many centuries. Originally the novices of S. Frideswyde’s Priory were instructed here, but later the place is found in the occupation of clerks studying the Civil and Canon Law under a Principal, and seems to have been the most distinguished of a number of hostels for legists clustered round S. Aldate’s Church, of which a room over the south aisle was used as a Law school and library of chained books. This picturesque feature of the Church remained till 1843. The students met daily for divine service in the aisle beneath, which afterwards became the chapel of Pembroke until 1728, the upper storey becoming the College library, which purpose it served till 1709.

The Hall was called Segrym’s (from a family who had once held it of the Priory) till the accession of Henry VI. when, a large entrance being made, it came to be known as Broadgates Hall. Fuller gives an Oxfordshire byword:—“Send farthingales to Broadgates Hall in Oxford.” King Henry VIII. annexed it to his new foundation across the road; but it continued to be a place of importance, being much resorted to by young men of rank and wealth. In the time of James I. it had 131 members, being exceeded in size by only five colleges and one (Magdalen) Hall. The following names are those of Broadgates students:—Bishop Bonner, entered 1512, died in the Marshalsea 1569; Heywoode “the Epigrammatist,” whose Interludes (1520) satirizing the clergy, are among our earliest dramatic writings; Peele the dramatist; Fitzjeffrey, “the poet of Broadgates Hall” (1572); Archbishop Yonge (1560); Baker, entered 1590, Benedictine monk, mystic, and chronicler; John Pym, the politician, entered 1599; Randolph the ambassador; Beaumont the poet, entered 1596; Cardinal Repyngdon; Storie, hanged at Tyburn; Peter Smart, puritan poet, Cosin’s assailant; Camden the antiquary, author of the grace still used after meat in Hall; Sir Thomas Browne, author of the delightful Religio Medici, who forms a link between Broadgates and Pembroke. He delivered a Latin oration as senior fellow commoner at the inauguration of the College.

Pembroke College.—The conversion of the Hall into a College came about in this way. Thomas Tesdale, maltster and merchant, of Glympton, Oxon, a fortnight before his decease, in 1610, bequeathed £5000 for the purchase of lands, etc., to maintain seven fellows and six scholars to be elected from the free grammar school in Abingdon into any college in Oxford. Abbot, the then Lord Primate, desired to secure this foundation for Balliol College, and a provisional agreement was signed with the Mayor and burgesses of Abingdon, on the strength of which Balliol purchased for £300 a building for the housing of Tesdale’s fellows and scholars. But twelve years after Tesdale’s death his foundation was augmented by a benefaction of Richard Wightwick, B.D., rector of East Ilsley, so as to support ten fellows and ten scholars. This turned the thoughts of the citizens of Abingdon in a more ambitious direction, and they desired the foundation of a separate and independent College. An Act of Parliament was got and a petition presented to the King, who by letters patents, dated June 29th, 1624, constituted Broadgates Hall, which had been fixed upon as a likely stock on which to graft the new foundation, to be “one perpetual College of divinity, civil and canon law, arts, medicine and other sciences; to consist of one master or governour, ten fellows, ten scholars, or more or fewer, to be known by the name of ‘the Master Fellows and Scholars of the College of Pembroke in the University of Oxford, of the foundation of King James, at the costs and charges of Thomas Tesdale and Richard Wightwicke.’” The new College was named from Shakspeare’s friend and patron William Herbert, Earl of Pembroke, a Mæcenas of that age, who as Chancellor was already Visitor of Broadgates, and from whom, had not his death happened suddenly, the College hoped to have received more than a bare name. In his honour the Chancellor was always to be, and is still, the Visitor of the College. It bears his arms, three rampant lions argent on a field azure and gules, with the royal rose and thistle on a chief argent and or.

Tesdale's brass in Glympton Church, put up a few years after his death, represents him as "liberally beneficial to Balliol College." Balliol however was put into Chancery for the restitution of the £300, which finally was handsomely paid by Archbishop Abbot. Savage, Master of Balliol, complains with pardonable resentment of the conduct of "this re-jeton" as he calls the new foundation, which was inaugurated with considerable ceremony on August 5, 1624, the students of Broadgates becoming members of Pembroke. Great and wide interest seems to have been taken in this the youngest of the Colleges, and further benefactions came to it, a principal donor being Sir John Benet, Lord Ossulstone. King Charles I. gave up the patronage of S. Aldate's to it, and founded a fellowship, as also at Jesus College and Exeter, to be held by a native of Guernsey or Jersey, with a view to raising the state of ecclesiastical learning in the Channel Islands. Bishop Morley, in the next reign, founded five exhibitions for Channel Islanders. In 1714 Queen Anne annexed a Gloucester prebend to the Mastership. Other considerable benefactions have been made since, especially by Francis Wightwick, Esq., Mrs. Sophia Sheppard and the Rev. Christopher Cleobury, and though this College has smaller corporate revenues than any, it is very well off for Scholarships.

Buildings.—The only part of Broadgates (which Hutten calls "that venerable piece of antiquity") still remaining is the Dining Hall, since 1848 the Library. The present Old Quadrangle was built between 1624 and 1694, but lost much of its pleasing and quaint character in 1829 when the exterior front was remodelled and a storey added to the tower. The Master's Lodging, once a five-gabled late 17th century building, was also Gothicized and subsequently raised one storey. The present New Quadrangle, consisting of Dining Hall and Fellows' and Undergraduates' rooms, was built during the mastership of Dr. Jeune in 1844, taking the place of the picturesque old gabled "Back lodgings" (figured in Ingram's Memorials). The large grass plat was formerly three ancient gardens divided by walls, that furthest to the west belonging to the Fellows, the centre one to the Master, and the strip on the east being a common garden. Here were a bowling alley, a ball-court, shady bowers, clipt walks, arbours, and a curious dial. When the Chapel was built in 1728, the year of Johnson's admission, the common garden was converted into gravel. In spite of the destruction of its former old-world charm, this quadrangle, hardly suspected to exist by the casual passer-by, is, with its irregular buildings covered with creepers, extremely pleasing. The Hall is an unusually good example of the Gothic Revival, and within the last few years the plain Ionic Chapel has been splendidly decorated, at a cost of £3,000, from the designs of Mr. C. E. Kempe, M.A., a member of the College, the windows in the Renaissance manner being unequalled specimens of modern glass-painting. The "Wolsey Almshouse" was acquired from Christ Church in 1888 for £11,000.

Past Days.—Except for the transverse addition at one end, built in 1620 by Principal Clayton, the irregularly shaped room which is now the Library is scarcely changed since the days of Bonner and Beaumont and Pym and Camden and Browne. Here George Whitefield carried about in leathern jacks—as he had done in his mother's alehouse at Gloucester—the liquor, or "coll," which Johnson abused as muddy and uninspiring to Latin themes:—

"Carmina vis nostri scribant meliora poetæ?
Ingenium jubeas purior haustus alat."

Here on a Powder-Plot day Johnson made his first declamation, as Madam Piozzi relates. Here the juniors "went round the fire" on gaudy days. Here they attended lectures. "Sir, you have scolded me twopence for a lecture not worth a penny," Johnson told his tutor Jorden one day when he had been sliding in Christ Church meadows. In later years he said, "Whenever a young man becomes Jorden's pupil he becomes his son." His own rudeness and boisterousness were but on the surface. He was often to be seen lounging in the College gate with a circle of young men round him whom he was entertaining with wit and keeping from their studies, if not spurring them up, says Bishop Percy, to rebellion against the College discipline, which in after life he so vigorously extolled. Dr. Adams told Boswell that while at Pembroke Johnson was caressed and loved by all about him, was a gay and frolicsome fellow, and passed there the happiest part of his life. Johnson hearing this from Boswell said, "Ah, sir, I was mad and violent. It was bitterness which they mistook for frolick. I was miserably poor and I thought to fight my way by my literature and my wit; so I disregarded all power and all authority." When some kind hand placed a pair of new shoes at his door, Johnson, as soon as he discovered them, flung them passionately away. His room, practically unaltered, is a very small one in the second storey over the common gate. He was not, however—pace Carlyle and Mr. Leslie Stephen—a servitor. Johnson ceased to reside in December 1729, taking no degree; but, we are told, "he had contracted a love and regard for Pembroke College which he retained to the last." He loved it none the less that it was reputed a Jacobitical place. In the height of his fame he was never happier than in re-visiting his old College, where his life-long friend Dr. Adams was Master, gallanting it about in academic gown with Hannah More, and pointing out to her the rooms of the Pembroke poets,—“We were a nest of singing birds,” he said. “Here we walked; there we played at cricket,”—conversing with old servants whom he remembered, shewing Warton where he had tried at the classical lecture to sit out of earshot of Meeke's construing, or taking Boswell into the old summer common-room on the city-wall and telling him “Ay, here I used to play at draughts with Phil Jones and Fludyer. Jones loved beer and did not get very forward in the Church. Fludyer turned out a scoundrel, a Whig, and said he was ashamed of having been bred at Oxford.” People flocked to Pembroke Chapel to gaze at the great despot of letters, that tender-hearted humble Christian worshipper. Just before his death he paid the familiar scenes a last fond visit. His deeply pathetic “Prayers and Meditations” with some of his College exercises are in the Library, where are also the little deal desk on which he wrote the Dictionary, and his bust by Bacon. In the Common Room are his teapot, holding two quarts, and a splendid portrait by Reynolds.

Pembroke produced an unusual number of eminent sons in the early part of the 18th century. Its character also stood high, though Prideaux in 1694 calls it "the fittest colledge in the town for brutes." A Mr. Laphorne, twenty years later, draws a different picture of it. "I have placed my son in Pembroke Colledge. The house, though it bee but a little one, yet is reputed to be one of the best for sobriety and order." Shenstone entered 1732 with Graves, author of the Spiritual Quixote, a satire on the Methodists. Graves draws a lively picture of the different sets in College. Among the servitors was Whitefield who also entered in 1832. He tells us that he was solicited to join in excess of riot with several who lay in the same room; but God gave him grace to withstand them. "I had no sooner received the sacrament publickly on a week-day at St. Mary's but I was set up as a mark for all the polite students that knew me to shoot at. I daily underwent some contempt from the collegians. Some have thrown dirt at me and others took away their pay from me." Another contemporary was Blackstone the eminent jurist. At an earlier date the names of Pembroke men include Bishop Timothy Hall, one of the few clergy who read the Declaration of Indulgence, Chief Justice Dyer, Collier, Southern, and at a later date Durel, Henderson, Gilbert, Valpy, Lemprière, Jeune. The two Beaumonts and Johnson lie in Westminster Abbey, where the remains of Pym also lay for a short while.

This house went through the usual troubles in the 17th century. The 18th was its flowering time. In the present century the vigorous administration of Dr. Jeune gave Pembroke a great lift, but it has remained a small but cosy College, noted for its excellent kitchen, its fine show of plate, its compact sociability, while the large proportion of scholars among its members has given it some distinction in the schools. The Eight was head of the River in 1872 and the Torpid in 1877, 1878 and 1879. The Master, Fellows, and Scholars are patrons of eight benefices. In spite of recent changes, the Master must still be in holy orders, and the tutorial fellows are bound to celibacy. There is a flourishing and old-established Literary Club called the "Johnson," a Debating and a Musical Society, and one of the earliest founded Wine Clubs. It should be mentioned that the College Library has lately had lustre added to it by the unique Aristotelian collection of the late Professor Chandler, presented by Mrs. Sophia Evans.

XIX.—WORCESTER COLLEGE.

THE Baron of Brimsfield, John Giffarde, made over, in 1283, to the Benedictine Abbey of St. Peter at Gloucester, a house which he had purchased from the Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem, and which had originally been the mansion of Gilbert Clare, Earl of Gloucester. It was to be a House of Study for thirteen monks of that Abbey, under the name of Gloucester College. This Benedictine Foundation was the first House of a Monastic Order established in Oxford: unlike Durham College, which was founded shortly afterwards, it admitted no secular students, but was solely for members of the Order. Within ten years the scheme of the College was enlarged, and it became the Oxford House of Study for the novices of the great Benedictine Houses generally, such as Glastonbury, St. Albans, Westminster, Evesham, Malnesbury, Norwich. These, separately or jointly, erected several tenements for their students, some of which still remain as described by Wood. But all were equally under control of the Prior, who was elected by the votes of all the students, and were governed by regulations enacted in a General Chapter of the Benedictine Order—regulations which jealously provided for the social isolation, and academical independence of the students. St. Alban's naturally, from its rank among the Benedictine Houses, holds the most important place in the record of their Oxford College. Abbot Whethamsted, who had been its Prior, was so great a benefactor as to be styled "the second Founder" of the College. He contributed largely to the erection of a Chapel (1420), built a Library, and equipped it with books, to which, at his instance, Humphrey, Duke of Gloucester, made large additions. The dissolution of the Monasteries involved the suppression of the Benedictine College, and its appropriation by the Crown. Whethamsted's Chapel and Library were reduced to a ruin; and the contents of the latter were lost, or dispersed among the other College Libraries, where Wood professes to have seen them "still bear their donor's name."

When Henry VIII. founded the Bishoprick at Osney, Gloucester College was made over to the Bishop for his palace, but in the transference of the Bishoprick to Oxford, it passed again to the Crown, and was ultimately purchased by Sir Thomas Whyte for his new foundation of St. John's College. By him it was converted into a Hall with the name of the Principal and Scholars of St. John's Hall: and on St. John Baptist's day 1560, the first Principal, William Stock, and one hundred Scholars took their first commons in the old monks' Refectory. It was in that same year that the body of Amy Robsart was secretly brought from Cumnor to Gloucester College, and lay there in a kind of state till the burial at St. Mary's.

St. John Baptist's Hall, or Gloucester Hall (for the old name soon re-asserted itself), had a chequered, but on the whole languishing existence. Men who retired for one reason or another from other Colleges found asylum there for themselves, and sometimes for their families. Thomas Allen, and Degory Whear, Camden's first History Professor, in this way occupied lodgings in the Hall; of which the latter became Principal in 1626. Whear repaired Hall and Library and Chapel. Under his vigorous administration, assisted by Allen's reputation, the number of the Students rapidly increased. We are told "there were 100 Students; and some being persons of quality, ten or twelve met in their doublets of cloth of gold and silver." Christopher Merritt, Fellow of the Royal Society, Richard Lovelace, and Sir Kenelm Digby, were during this period members of the Hall. But this brief prosperity came to an end with the outbreak of the Civil Wars. It was deserted of its Students; its buildings were converted into "workshops for the manufacture of swords and guns." Wood, describing the general depression of the University says that "not one Scholar matriculated in 1675, 1676, 1677, 1678, not one Scholar in Gloucester Hall, only the Principal and his family, and two or three more families that live there in some part to keep it from ruin, the paths are grown over with grass, the way into the Hall and Chapel made up with boards." Prideaux, under date 1676, gives a like story of decay, and Loggan's picturesque view, taken in 1675, with its pathetic motto "Quare fecit dominus sic domui huic," illustrates the mournful desolation which had settled on the place.

Such was the condition of the Hall, when, in 1692, Dr. Byrom Eaton, who had been Principal for thirty years, resigned, and was succeeded by a man of vigorous, bustling, pushing character, a kind of academical adventurer. This was Dr. Woodroffe, a Canon of Christ Church, whose nomination to the Deanery by James II., in 1688, had been cancelled at the Revolution in favour of Dean Aldrich. Woodroffe's first venture with the Hall was on the old lines, but apparently with but slight success, for though, according to Wood, "by his great interest among the gentry he made it flourish with hopeful sprouts," it is also Wood's evidence that in 1694 there were but "6 in Commons at Gloucester Hall, his 2 sons two." His next venture was the conversion of the Hall into a Greek College—a scheme promoted by Archbishop Sancroft, and others who favoured the hope of reunion with the Eastern Church. Under this scheme five young Grecians were in 1698 brought from Smyrna, and placed in Gloucester Hall. But mismanagement and neglect soon ruined the experiment; Students bound for Oxford were caught on their way in the vortex of London temptations, and in 1705 the Greek College received its quietus in a missive from the Patriarch of Constantinople forbidding "any to go and study at Oxford be they ever so willing."

But while the Greek College was still perishing of inanition, its Principal was engaged in a scheme of a more ambitious though less interesting nature. A Worcestershire Baronet, Sir Thomas Cookes, had made known his desire, through the Bishop of Worcester, of founding a College at Oxford; £10,000 was the sum he proposed for an endowment. There was competition for the prize. Dr. Woodroffe wanted to secure it for Gloucester Hall, Dr. Mill for St. Edmund Hall, Dr. Lancaster for Magdalen Hall.

But local rivals were not the only difficulty in the way of Dr. Woodroffe. He had to contend as well with the vacillations of Sir Thomas Cookes, who at one time was for Balliol College, at another favoured the notion of a workhouse for his own County. However, at last Dr. Woodroffe was so far successful as to obtain a charter in 1698 for the incorporation of the Hall under the title of the Provost, Fellows, and Scholars of Worcester College, with Dr. Woodroffe for the first Provost. This was followed by a Ratification, dated November 18th, naming the Bishop of Worcester as Visitor, and the Bishop of Oxford as his assessor in difficult cases, and making elaborate provision for the organization, conduct, and educational system of the College on the old fashioned lines.

But the charter remained after all a dead letter. Sir Thomas Cookes on various grounds still held back, and it was not till after his death in 1701, and that of Dr. Woodroffe in 1711, that the trustees of Sir T. Cookes' will, saw their way to carrying it out in favour of Gloucester Hall.

In 1713 St. John's College agrees to alienate the Hall for the sum of £200, and a quit-rent of 20s. per annum. In the following year, two days only before the Queen's death, a Charter of Incorporation, for the second time, passes the Great Seal, and Gloucester Hall or College is finally merged in Worcester College. The foundation was now to consist of a Provost, six Fellows, and six Scholars, whose emoluments were to be on a somewhat more liberal scale than that of the original statutes. Fellows and Scholars were to be allowed sixpence a day for commons, the Fellows to have £30 per annum, the Scholars 13s. 8d. a quarter, the Provost £80 per annum, but no allowance for commons; at the same time the original elaborate provisions for government and education were simplified and modernised. The Principal of the Hall, Blechynden, was named as the first Provost. The rebuilding of the College, commenced with a modest benefaction of Mrs. Margaret Alcorne in 1720, proceeded by very slow degrees. The interior of the Library was completed in 1736, its exterior in 1746. The Hall was finished in 1784, while the Chapel still remained incomplete in 1786, when Gutch wrote his account. In the meantime two considerable benefactors arose. Dr. Clarke, Fellow of All Souls' and member for the University, left an endowment for six Fellowships and three Scholarships, together with his valuable Library, while Mrs. Sarah Eaton, daughter of the former Principal, bequeathed an endowment for seven Fellowships and five Scholarships to be held by the sons of Clergymen. These new Foundations were incorporated by Charter in 1744. For lodging Dr. Clarke's Foundation the demolition of the old Buildings on the North side of the quadrangle was begun, and nine sets of rooms erected by his trustees in 1753-9, while in 1773 the remainder of the old North side was, with the exception of the East end, swept away, and twelve sets were built for Mrs. Eaton's Foundation, together with the present Provost's lodgings. Fortunately funds ran short for further reconstruction, so that the old Benedictine tenements still form the Southern side of the quadrangle, which has another great merit, that of being open on its Western side. Meantime the College from time to time secured adjacent property, and surrounded itself with an open belt of land, while the ornamental grounds, as they now exist, were laid out about 1827.

The latest structural improvements of the College took place in 1864, when the Chapel was decorated after the elaborate designs of the late Mr. William Burges, and again in 1877, when the Hall was rendered a fitting pendant to the Chapel by the same Architect. Of the varying fortunes of the College—exceptionally, and picturesquely varying—some few relics survive. The annual quit-rent which it still pays to St. John's is a memorial of one stage of its history, while the old tenements lining its quadrangle attest its earlier connection with the great Benedictine Order, of whom a lingering echo still survives, as it is said, in the reveillé which the Porter, making his morning rounds, hammers out with a wooden mallet upon the door of each several staircase.

In drawing up this short account we have been permitted by the courtesy of the Publishers to make use of the History of the Colleges and Halls of Oxford, edited by Mr. Clarke, a work to which the reader is referred for fuller details.

WOODEN ORNAMENT FROM STALLS, NEW COLLEGE CHAPEL.—Pugin.

LOGGAN'S VIEW OF HART HALL, 1675. [Reduced facsimile.]

PARAPET ST. MARY'S CHURCH.—Mackenzie and Pugin.

XX.—HERTFORD COLLEGE.

ALTHOUGH Hertford is the youngest College of the University, it stands close to the very centre of the University's most ancient home, on a site which has been the scene of Academical life from the earliest times. At least four ancient Halls were comprised within the limits of the present College: Cat Hall, near the present Principal's lodgings; Black Hall, at the corner of New College Lane; Hart Hall and Arthur Hall, the two latter occupying the Library corner of the Quadrangle. Hart Hall eventually swallowed up all its neighbours as well as the ground between them.

Hart Hall, 1280(?)—1740.

The house is first known to have been a residence for scholars when it had passed into the possession of one Elias de Hertford, from whom it got its name of Hert Hall (Aula Cervina). This was between 1261 and 1284. A Hall was then simply a boarding-house, hired by a party of students as a residence. One of them, called a Principal, paid the rent and collected the amount from the rest. Eventually the University required that he should be a Graduate, and a new Principal had to be admitted by the Chancellor.

In 1312, the Hall, after some intermediate transfers, passed to Walter de Stapeldon, Bishop of Exeter. For some years before the acquisition of their present site, it was the habitation of the Rector and Scholars of Stapeldon Hall, now known as Exeter College. After this Hart Hall continued to belong to them, and was let to a Principal, usually one of their own fellows. At one time it was occupied by Wykeham's Scholars during the building of their own College.

The most distinguished man who can be fairly claimed as an alumnus of Hart Hall is the learned Selden (1600-1603) then "a long scabby-pol'd boy but a good student." Ken, the saintly Bishop of Bath and Wells, was apparently a member of the Hall for a few months while waiting for a vacancy at New College. Sir Henry Wotton, one of the seventeenth century worthies immortalized by Isaac Walton, resided here, though it would seem that he was not a member of the Hall but a gentleman-commoner of New College.

The first transformation of this ancient Hall into a College was the work of Richard Newton, formerly student of Christ Church, who became Principal in 1710. He was a man of some eminence as a scholar, a teacher, and a divine, while a number of pamphlets testify to his zeal as a University Reformer. . . .

Hertford College, 1740-1816.

But his great ambition was to found a college. "Dr. Newton is commonly said to be Founder-mad," wrote the malicious Hearne; "Dr. Newton is very fond of founding a College," wrote another, in 1721. The patronage which he never stooped to ask for himself, he sought to use for his College. But his grand friends did little for him; nearly all that he spent came out of his own pocket. He spent about £1500 on building a Chapel for the Hall (consecrated in 1716) and the adjoining corner of the present Quadrangle. He published an edition of Theophrastus by subscription for the benefit of his College, but it did not appear till after his death. His proposals for the foundation of a College were made public in 1734 in a Letter to the Vice-Chancellor, though he had already "made a noise" about it "many years." . . .

At last, in 1740, after much opposition from Exeter College, Dr. Newton got his Charter of Incorporation, and his Statutes approved by George II.

For a time the College enjoyed considerable prosperity. Charles James Fox was one of its gentlemen commoners from 1764 to 1765. But Newton's means were not really adequate to the foundation of a College, and its scanty funds seem to have gradually dwindled away. On Dr. Hodgson's death in 1805 no one would accept the almost honorary headship, but at last in 1814, the one surviving fellow, who was (we are told) considered "half-cracked," announced that he had "nominated, constituted and admitted himself Principal"! At this time the place was all but deserted. It became a sort of no man's land, in which a score of "strange characters" ("as if being 'half-cracked' were a qualification for admission") squatted rent free. Eventually the University took upon itself to close the building. In 1820 the building adjoining Cat Street actually fell down "with a great crash and a dense cloud of dust."

Magdalen Hall (on this site) 1820-1874.

On January 9th, 1820, a fire deprived Magdalen Hall of its local habitation. . . In 1816 the President and Fellows had procured an Act of Parliament transferring the site and buildings of Hertford Society to Magdalen Hall, i.e. technically, to the University in trust for the Hall. With part of the small property of the College, the Hertford Scholarship was founded: the rest passed to the Society of Magdalen Hall, which in 1822 took possession of its new home. A word must be said as to the traditions of which Hertford College thus became the inheritor.

It was in this Hall that the Ultra-Protestant traditions of Magdalen lingered after they had died out in the College itself. It had been within the walls of Magdalen Hall that the English Reformation had its true beginning in certain meetings for Bible-reading started by William Tyndale, afterwards the translator of the Bible; and in the seventeenth century, when the Laudian movement had got the upper hand in the Colleges at large, it became a refuge for the oppressed Puritans. At one time it boasted three hundred members. In 1631 its Principal, John Wilkinson, and Prideaux, Rector of Exeter College, were summoned before the King in Council, at Woodstock, and received "a publick and sharp reprehension for their misgoverning and countenancing the factious partie." Soon after, Oxenbridge, one of its tutors, was "distorted" for his Puritanism. In 1640, Henry Wilkinson (also of the Hall) was suspended for preaching "in a very bitter way against some of the ceremonies of the Church." But the day of vengeance came. When the Parliamentary Visitors came to Oxford, the suspended tutor, Henry Wilkinson, senior, commonly known as "Long Harry," was the most prominent and zealous of the Visitors. The students of Magdalen Hall and New Inn submitted to a man, and the places of the ejected Fellows and Scholars were largely recruited from their number. A very large proportion of the eminent Puritans of the seventeenth century came from these two Halls. A few of the distinguished Magdalen Hall men, whom Hertford College now claims as a sort of step-mother, may be added—John L'Isle, President of the High Court of Justice; John Glynn, Lord Chief Justice of England under Cromwell; William Waller, the Cromwellian poet (afterwards at Hart Hall); Sir Matthew Hale, the most famous of English judges; Sydenham, "the English Hippocrates"; Sir Henry Vane; Pococke, the Orientalist; and Dr. John Wilkins, the mathematician (afterwards Warden of Wadham, then Master of Trinity College, Cambridge, and later Bishop of Chester). Few Colleges in the University ever sent out so many distinguished men within so short a time. But the greatest name that Magdalen Hall can boast figures oddly in this list of Puritan worthies. Thomas Hobbes, of Malmesbury, entered when not quite fifteen, in 1603, and went down in 1607 with the B.A. degree. Clarendon was also a member of the Hall for a short time while waiting for a demyship at Magdalen College. Swift, whose undergraduate life was passed at Dublin, took his Oxford B.A. from Magdalen Hall in 1692, and proceeded M.A. a few weeks later, during which interval we may perhaps assume that he resided in the Hall.

A word must also be found for the distinction given to the last days of this famous Hall by the long Principalship of Dr. Macbride (1813-1868) the well-known evangelical leader, and the Vice-principalship (1832-1848) of William Jacobson eminent as a patristic scholar and afterwards Bishop of Chester. During this period, the Hall became once more one of the largest societies of the University. Thorold Rogers, Delane of the Times, and "Observer" Johnson—a prominent figure in the early annals of Tractarianism—were amongst its most distinguished members.

Hertford College, founded 1874.

The last of the many vicissitudes which this venerable site has experienced remains to be recorded. In 1874 the defunct Hertford College was recalled to life by the munificence of Mr. T. C. Baring, M.P., who endowed it with seventeen Fellowships, and thirty Scholarships of £100 per annum, mostly limited to members of the Church of England. An Act of Parliament gave the new foundation "All such rights and privileges as are possessed or enjoyed or can be exercised by other Colleges in the University of Oxford;" and Dr. Richard Michell, the last Principal of Magdalen Hall (who, indeed, had already introduced into Parliament a bill for the transformation of the Hall into a college), became the first Principal of the present Hertford College.

While future ages will feel towards the name of Baring all the loyalty that is a Founder's due, it is a fortunate circumstance that the accidents which have been related enabled him to give to his new foundation the only thing which money could not buy—a slight flavour of antiquity. The existing foundation is substantially the creation of Mr. Baring, but enough remains of its predecessors—the Elizabethan Hall now transformed into a Library, the Jacobean Common-rooms which represent the pre-Newtonian Hart Hall, Newton's Chapel with the adjoining "Angle," the plate and pictures of Magdalen Hall and its ten Scholarships—to give us a link with the past, a not uninteresting past, of which, however glorious its future, the College need never be ashamed. In one sense, notwithstanding the newness of its foundation, the College belongs to the past more than its more venerable sisters. It is untouched by recent legislation, its Statutes are constructed upon the old model, and it still rejoices in Fellowships which are tenable during life and celibacy.

ST. MARY HALL.

This Hall was originally a tenement on the present site, given by HENRY KELPE, a citizen of Oxford, in 1239, to the rector of St. Mary's Church and his successors. It continued to be the parsonage-house of the rector's till Edward II., in 1325, gave the Church, with all its appurtenances, to Oriel College. It was converted by that society, in 1333, into a separate place of education, and subsequently became an independent Academical Hall, receiving successive enlargement and improvement in its buildings chiefly at the expense of former principals, King, Nowell, Dean, and Hampden.

By virtue of a statute made by the University Commissioners in 1881, this Hall will be united to ORIEL when the present principal has completed his term of office.

PRINCIPAL.

Chase, rev. Drummond Percy, born at Saubruit, near St. Omer, France, 14 Sept., 1828; 2s. John Woodford, arm. PEMBROKE, matric. 15 Feb., 38, aged 17; migrated to ORIEL, B.A. 41, fellow 42 (see page 149), M.A. 44, tutor 47-9, 66-8, proctor 53, B. and D.D. 80; vice-principal 48-57 and principal of ST. MARY HALL 57 (HONOURS:—1 classics 47), select preacher 60, vicar of St. Mary the Virgin, Oxford, 56-63, and 76-8.

VICE-PRINCIPAL.

Phelps, (rev.) Lancelot Ridley, born at Ridley, near Sevenoaks, Kent, 3 Nov., 1853; 3s. Thomas Prankerd, cler. ORIEL, matric. 22 Oct., 72, aged 18 (from the Charterhouse), scholar 72-7, B.A. 77, fellow 77 (see page 150), M.A. 79 (HONOURS:—2 classical mods. 74, and 2 classics 76), lecturer in political economy 82-5, classical lecturer Pembroke 80-2, and St. Mary Hall 80-5, vice-principal 85.

OTHER RESIDENT MEMBERS OF CONGREGATION.

Charsley, rev. Robert Harvey, born at Beaconsfield, Bucks, 1826; 4s. John, gent. ST. MARY HALL, matric. 30 Oct., 48, aged 22 (from) Nowell exhibitioner 52-3, B.A. 53, M.A. 58 (HONOURS:—2 mathematics 52); chaplain of the Radcliffe Infirmary, Oxford, 55.

Kirkby, rev. Marsh, born at Wandsworth, Surrey, 29 Sept., 1859; 2s. William, cler. NON-COLLEGIATE, matric. 1 Feb., 79, aged 19 (from King's school, Rochester); migrated to CHARLSLEY HALL, B.A. 83, M.A. 86; transferred to St. Mary Hall 91.

Mareon, rev. Charles Abdy, born at Edgesfield, Norfolk, 22 Sept., 1854; 3s. Walter, rector. CHARLSLEY HALL, matric. 14 Jan., 74, aged 20 (from Esenham gr. school), B.A. 78, M.A. 82, master of Marcon's Hall 92.

CHAPEL AND LIBRARY.—From Ingram.

ST. EDMUND HALL.

ST. EDMUND HALL, or—as it was often styled—EDMUND HALL, is one of the very oldest foundations in the University. Antony Wood says that up to his time the name was generally explained by the assigning of the foundation of the Hall to Edmund Rich (of Abingdon), who afterwards became Archbishop of Canterbury and in 1246 was canonized by Pope Innocent IV. In this case the date of the Hall would be some time in the reign of Henry the Third. It is quite certain that Edmund Rich, to whom the University owes a great deal, did give public lectures somewhere in this part of Oxford, and one would like to believe that he really did lecture where this Hall called by the name of St. Edmund stands. But—in discussing the question—Wood goes on to give reasons for his own opinion that the real founder was a private individual—one Edmund, a native of Oxford of some local repute, early in the beginning of the reign of Henry III. The property, he says, belonged to this Edmund, and from him it went to his son Ralph, and from him to Sir Brian de Bermingham. He in his turn sold it—in about the 48th year of Henry the Third's reign—to Thomas de Malmesbury, and this Thomas established a regular foundation for the purpose of study and learning. In 1269 it went into other hands—those namely of the Canons of the Abbey of Osney—and they (we are told) had to pay to Thomas de Malmesbury so long as he lived one mark per annum as rent—besides 8s. yearly to a Nun of Littlemore—Elizabeth, the daughter of Adam de Ocle. As in their other establishments so here the Osney Canons did much to foster the cause of learning—but little or nothing is to be ascertained definitely about the fortunes of the Hall for some years. But in the time of Henry the Eighth, by the terms of the Statute of Monasteries, the Hall passed out of the hands of the Abbey of Osney into those of the King. And on the 22nd of November, 1546, Letters Patent were passed which brought it into the possession of John Bellow and Robert Bygott. They in their turn conveyed it (temp. Edward the Sixth) to William Burnell, and he again sold it to a Provost of Queen's College—William Denyse. Thus it was that, through this Provost Denyse, on the 28th of July, 1557, Queen's came into possession of the Hall, and in 1559 an Act of Convocation was procured by that Society, according to the terms of which they obtained the perpetual right of nominating its Principals.

The Buildings of the Hall have gone through various changes at different times in history. The oldest part of the existing buildings probably dates from some 250 to 300 years ago—possibly from even a longer period. It would be beyond the purpose of this notice to attempt to discuss the changes of the buildings minutely.

The present Chapel standing at the East end of the Quadrangle was built under the direction of Principal Stephen Penton, who was himself a munificent contributor to its cost. Over the entrance is the Inscription

“DEO. OPT. MAX.
Capellam hanc Sumtu
Suo et Amicorum posuit
STEPHANUS PENTON, S.T.B.
Istius Aulae Principalis.
Anno Domini MDCLXXXII.”

The first stone was laid on Monday, April 19th, 1680, and after completion in two years' time the Chapel was consecrated by Bishop Fell on Friday the 7th of April, 1682. It was by him dedicated to St. Edmund, Archbishop of Canterbury, and down to the present time the Day of St. Edmund of Canterbury (November 16) is specially commemorated in the Hall. From these facts it is certain that, whether the original Edmund of all was the Archbishop or the Oxford Burgher, yet for more than 200 years the Hall has, by virtue of its dedication, had a proveable ecclesiastical connexion with that same St. Edmund of Canterbury.

The present Library, which stands immediately over the Ante-Chapel, was also begun, as it seems, in 1680, and took the place of a yet earlier one still, which had been largely enriched by Principal Tully. To the new Library various benefactors gave contributions, and from that day to this additions have been, and are, made to it. It is fortunate in possessing an especially good collection of Theological books, and for its economy of space can have few equals in Oxford or indeed anywhere.

Among those Members of the University who have in various ways been connected with the Hall, during its long career of nearly six hundred years, have been many men of note. Such especially was Dr. John Mill, the famous editor of the Greek Testament, in whose Principalship the Hall may well feel some pride. He was a Fellow of Queen's, Rector of Bletchington, Oxon, Chaplain-in-Ordinary to King Charles II., and Prebendary of Canterbury, and became Principal on the 5th of May, 1685, and died on the 23rd of June, 1707.

Another eminent Principal was Dr. Thomas Shaw the celebrated Oriental traveller. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society as well as Regius Professor of Greek in the University, and was Principal of this Hall from 1740—1751.

Among its Vice-Principals the Hall has in recent times had the Rev. Danie. Wilson, from 1804—1807 Assistant Tutor, and from 1807—June, 1812, Vice-Principal, who afterwards became Bishop of Calcutta, and also his pupil and successor, the Rev. John Hill (1829—1851). Also in days still later (1859—1862) the late lamented Canon Liddon, whose name—as to the whole Church of England, so especially to all graduate and undergraduate members of St. Edmund Hall—will for ever be particularly dear.

And among other men of fame connected with the Hall must be mentioned the names of the Antiquary, Thomas Hearne, and Peter Clerke or Payne—who was Principal about 1410. Hearne, even in his undergraduate days here, largely assisted Dr. Mill's Greek Testament researches, and when he had taken his Degree and was compiling his Diaries, etc., in the Bodleian Library and from whatever sources he could obtain materials, continued to make the Hall his home.

Peter Clerke or Payne was Principal (Mr. James Baker, F.R.G.S., thinks that he was a Vice-Principal*) at the time of Wycliffe, and leaving England betook himself to the Continent in order to assist the struggling Continental Protestants.

Among the names of recent Members of this Hall may also be mentioned with pride that of Dr. Jacobson—late Bishop of Chester.

ROBERT GARLAND PLUMPTRE, M.A.,
Vice-Principal.

The writer of the above brief Notice (which is mainly derived from Gutch's Edition of Wood) hopes in course of time to compile a somewhat fuller and more detailed Memoir of the Hall, to which he would refer any readers who may take an interest in the subject.

* Vide three Articles in The Leisure Hour—Parts 459, 460, and 461, for March, April, and May, 1890, by James Baker, F.R.G.S., entitled "A Forgotten Great Englishman" (viz. Peter Payne).

PARAPET MAGDALEN CHURCH.—Mackenzie and Pugin.

XX.—KEBLE COLLEGE.

THIS College was opened in 1870, having been raised by subscription as a memorial to the Rev. John Keble. There were, indeed, other causes which contributed to its foundation. Ever since 1845 there had been a growing wish among many in Oxford that an academical education should be made more economical and thereby more accessible to the sons of poorer parents. In that year a powerful body of petitioners, including such representative names as those of the Duke of Westminster, Lord Ashley, Lord Carnarvon, Sidney Herbert, W. E. Gladstone, S. Wilberforce, G. Moberley, A. C. Tait, laid an address before the Hebdomadal Board, urging that though much had been done in late years for the diffusion of civil and spiritual knowledge, especially by the institution of schools for the lower and middle classes, and for the sons of the poorer clergy and others at Marlborough and at Fleetwood, yet that there was a great chasm between these schools and the ministry. They therefore pleaded that this chasm should be filled by making academical education accessible at a lower cost, either by the addition of new departments to existing colleges or, if necessary, by the foundation of new collegiate bodies. This petition produced no immediate result, but the design was constantly before those interested in the work of the ministry, and in 1865 an informal meeting of graduates was held in Oriel College to consider the best means by which this object could be secured; and as one outcome of the meeting, a committee reported in favour of building a new Hall, by private subscription, where, by a more economical arrangement of the buildings, and by an extension of the principle of a common meal from dinner to all meals, it might be possible to reproduce all the advantages of College life at a less extravagant expense. Meanwhile, a strong movement was growing in the Liberal party in Parliament, the aim of which was to throw open all the endowments of the older Colleges to everyone, irrespective of religious belief, and to make these Colleges no longer necessarily places of Church education. The Tests Act was not yet passed, but its principles were in the air and Churchmen were anxious to provide by fresh effort a new College where education might be still in the hands of Churchmen. It was at such a moment that the death of John Keble (on March 16, 1866) supplied the opportunity of carrying these two wishes into effect. He had been Fellow and Tutor of Oriel College for many years, Professor of Poetry in the University 1832-41, and had taken active interest in academical life until the last, having seen and approved of the report of the Committee referred to above. Moreover he was the first of the leading Tractarians who passed away, and the memorial to him naturally became the chief memorial of the Tractarian movement: for it was he more than any one other man who had given the impulse to that movement. His Christian Year had deepened the tone of spiritual life and raised the sense of the ideal of the Church before the movement began: he had inspired Hurrell Froude, Robert Wilberforce, and Isaac Williams, and through them Newman and Pusey, with his own imaginative conception of the spiritual character of the Church: he had in 1833 given the signal for a protest against the encroachments of the State by his sermon on National Apostasy: his character had been one of the strongest bonds between the champions of the Church at that time: and after Newman's secession in 1845 he, with Dr. Pusey, had been the steady power which had kept many loyal to the Church of Christ in England. Consequently the appeal for subscriptions met with a ready response: Dr. Pusey threw himself heartily into the scheme, and it was due to him more than to any one other that the scheme was so speedily successful. In the words of the promoters "The College was intended to be a heartfelt and national tribute of affection and admiration to the memory of one of the most eminent and religious writers whom the Church of England has ever produced, one whose holy example was perhaps even a greater power for good than his Christian Year: secondly, to meet the great need now so generally felt of some form of University Extension which may include a large portion of persons at present debarred through want of means from its full benefits: while thirdly it is hoped that it will prove, by God's blessing, the loyal handmaid of our mother Church, to train up men who, not in the ministry only, but in the manifold callings of the Christian life, shall be steadfast in the faith." Thus, though the idea of the college had originated in the desire to train candidates for the Christian Ministry, this plan was from the first widened and its aim was to give education to all members of the Church of England whether their vocation was to a lay or clerical life. In other words "it was a primary object of its foundation that it should be worked in the spirit of the system which has hitherto been that of the Collegiate life in Oxford, and that through it the Church of England should offer to her sons, whether their prospects be lay or clerical, an education under her own auspices, by which they may become, not only more dutiful but more affectionate members of her communion."

With these aims the College was opened in 1870, and its buildings have been gradually extended until it now numbers more than a hundred and fifty students. The buildings have all been erected by Mr. Butterfield, and include two munificent donations, the Chapel being the gift of Mr. William Gibbs, of Tyntesfield, Bristol, the Hall and Library the gift of his sons Messrs. Antony and Martin Gibbs.

The College was in 1870 constituted by Royal Charter a corporate body with power to hold lands not exceeding the value of five thousand pounds: and by an amendment of the Mortmain Act in 1888 testators are empowered to bequeath property to it. It has already received by gift the advowsons of more than twenty livings.

The Charter also authorized the incorporation of the College within the University of Oxford; but this incorporation has not been carried out, and its constitution differs from that of the other colleges.

The Governing Body consists of a Council of twelve Members, the first twelve having been elected by the body of subscribers and nominated in the Royal Charter, and the body being perpetuated by co-optation as vacancies arise. The Council elect the Warden, who nominates the Tutors. Its relation to the University was fixed by the Statute dealing with new Foundations for Academical Study and Education, to the privileges of which it was admitted in 1871. By this all its members have the same privileges and obligations as if they had been admitted to one of the older Colleges, and the Warden has, with regard to the members of his Society, the same obligations, rights and powers, as the heads of the older Colleges, but the Statute does not impose upon him any other obligation or confer any other right, privilege or distinction. The further question whether, apart from the provisions of the Statute, he possesses the same rights in relation to the University as are possessed by the heads of the older Colleges has never been decided. The College has been admitted to rank on an equality with the other Colleges, with regard to the election of Proctors by the last legislation, in 1887, dealing with the Proctorial Cycle.—WALTER LOCK, M.A.

Non-Collegiate Delegacy.

NON-COLLEGIATE STUDENTS.

(From University Calendar.)

IN the year 1868 persons were first permitted, under certain conditions prescribed in Statt. Tit. III. Sect. i and iv. to become Students and Members of the University without being members of any College or Hall. Such persons keep their statutable residence in houses or licenced lodgings within the limit of a circle the centre of which is Carfax, and the radius a line one mile and a half in length; they enjoy the same rights of profiting by Professors' lectures, of competing for University Prizes, of attaining distinction in the Public Examinations, and of being admitted to Degrees and to all the consequent privileges, as are enjoyed by other students.

The reception of Students into the University under the prescribed conditions, and the exercise of discipline over them during their residence in Oxford, are committed to a Delegacy consisting of the Vice-Chancellor, the Proctors, the Controller of Lodging Houses, a Censor, and six Members of Convocation holding office for six years, of whom two are elected by Congregation, two by the Hebdomadal Council, and two are nominated by the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors subject to the approval of Convocation. The Censor, who is nominated by the Vice-Chancellor and Proctors, holds office for five years. The Very Rev. G. W. Kitchin, D.D., Dean of Winchester, formerly Censor, was added as a Perpetual Delegate by Decree of Convocation on November 20, 1883.

The students are under the supervision of the Censor, who is charged with the care of their conduct and studies. There are also Tutors appointed by the Delegates to give instruction to the Students.
